"(o)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the Commissioner of Social Security determines that an individual, who is 18 years of age or older, is eligible to receive benefits pursuant to section 1614(a)(3), the Commissioner shall, at the time of the determination, either exempt the individual from an eligibility review or establish a schedule for reviewing the individual's continuing eligibility in accordance with paragraph (2).

"(2)(A) The Commissioner shall establish a periodic review with respect to the continuing eligibility of an individual to receive benefits, unless the individual is exempt from review under subparagraph (C) or is subject to a scheduled review under subparagraph (B). A periodic review under this subparagraph shall be initiated by the Commissioner not later than 30 months after the date a determination is made that the individual is eligible for benefits and every 30 months thereafter, unless a waiver is granted under section 221(i)(2). However, the Commissioner shall not postpone the initiation of a periodic review for more than 12 months in any case in which such waiver has been granted unless exigent circumstances require such postponement.

Notwithstanding any such classification, the Commissioner may, at the time of determining an individual's eligibility, schedule a review of such individual's continuing eligibility if the Commissioner determines that a review is necessary to preserve the integrity of the supplemental security income program.

"(3) The Commissioner may revise a determination made under paragraph (1) and schedule a review under paragraph (2)(B), if the Commissioner obtains credible evidence that an individual may no longer be eligible for benefits or the Commissioner determines that a review is necessary to maintain the integrity of the supplemental security income program. Information obtained under section 1137 may be used as the basis to schedule a review.

"(B) Such reviews may be conducted by the applicable State agency or the Commissioner, whichever is appropriate.

TITLE IV—RESTRICTING WELFARE AND PUBLIC BENEFITS FOR ALIENS

SEC. 400. STATEMENTS OF NATIONAL POLICY CONCERNING WELFARE AND IMMIGRATION.

The Congress makes the following statements concerning national policy with respect to welfare and immigration:

(1) Self-sufficiency has been a basic principle of United States immigration law since this country's earliest immigration statutes.

(2) It continues to be the immigration policy of the United States that—

(A) aliens within the nation's borders not depend on public resources to meet their needs, but rather rely on their own capabilities and the resources of their families, their sponsors, and private organizations, and

(B) the availability of public benefits not constitute an incentive for immigration to the United States.

(3) Despite the principle of self-sufficiency, aliens have been applying for and receiving public benefits from Federal, State, and local governments at increasing rates.

(4) Current eligibility rules for public assistance and unenforceable financial support agreements have proved wholly incapable of assuring that individual aliens not burden the public benefits system.

(5) It is a compelling government interest to enact new rules for eligibility and sponsorship agreements in order to assure that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

(6) It is a compelling government interest to remove the incentive for illegal immigration provided by the availability of public benefits.

(7) With respect to the State authority to make determinations concerning the eligibility of qualified aliens for public benefits in this title, a State that chooses to follow the Federal classification in determining the eligibility of such aliens for public assistance shall be considered to have chosen the least restrictive means available for achieving the compelling governmental interest of assuring that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

GAMBLING STUDY COMMISSION

• Mr. FAIRCLOTH. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate approved S. 704, a bill to create a National Gambling Impact Study Commission. I strongly support this bill.

Legalized gambling of all kinds, casino gambling as well as State lotteries has often been touched as a way for States and localities to make money for various good causes. In my own State of North Carolina, support for a State lottery has always been offered as a means of supplementing the State education budget.

The North Carolina General Assembly has so far defeated several attempts to establish a State lottery.

Lotteries in particular, are held up as a means of filling State coffers, a way of financing Government projects, not as a boon to individual citizens. Mr. President, I for one am somewhat skeptical of any project which seeks to grow Government, for whatever purpose. Government—at the State, local, and Federal level—has been growing by leaps and bounds in recent years, reaching into areas of our lives it was never intended for. The ever-increasing burden of taxes and regulation has placed tremendous strain on families and small businesses. It seems to me we need to concentrate on restraining government, not expanding it.

It is becoming increasingly evident that gambling may not be the economic boon it is held out to be. The North Carolina Department of Commerce commissioned a study of the potential economic and social impact of gambling in western North Carolina. The study's conclusions were dramatic: Casino gambling would likely create more problems than it solved for western North Carolina. Among them, congested roads, rising crime rates and the crowding out of traditional tourist business and the families who patronize them.

In addition, the human toll of gambling is just beginning to be assessed adequately. Compulsive gambling can lead to alcoholism, bankruptcy, and can lead to the destruction of individuals and families.

If legalized gambling is the great economic boon its supporters make it out to be, they should not fear the results of this study. If it is not, it deserves a closer look.•

FISCAL YEAR 1997 LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATIONS ACT

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise to discuss briefly the fiscal year 1997 Legislative Branch Appropriations Act. This afternoon, the Committee on Appropriations reported the bill unanimously, and I expect it to reach the floor prior to the August recess.

Mr. President, I would like to commend the chairman, Senator MACK, for putting together a solid bill. His leadership on legislative branch issues has been terrific, and I have been excited to work with him on a bipartisan basis to manage the operations of Congress in a responsive—and responsible—way. He was bold last year, and it paid off. We have been able to reduce our spending by over $200 million—about 10 percent—in the past year.

This year, we continue the effort to streamline by reducing our internal budget by nearly $20 million in fiscal year 1997. We have taken testimony from legislative branch agencies affirming that they, under the funding levels in the bill, can maintain a high level of quality services to Members. Senators in turn should be able to provide responsive, high quality service to their constituents.

I would like to highlight one provision in the bill for Members of the Senate. With the enthusiastic support of Chairman MACK, I have included language that will enable the Sergeant at Arms to transfer excess or surplus computer equipment to schools.

In the past, the Senate sold its computers to employees at bargain prices. Fortunately, this practice has been terminated, and I commend the Sergeant at Arms for doing so. For the past couple years, our computers have simply been transferred to GSA for disposal through the normal surplus process.

I think Senators should be aware that the Senate disposes of over 1,500 computers every year. Over the past 3 years, nearly 5,000 computers have been let go. For the most part, these are IBM-compatible, 386, 16-megahertz machines. They are a generation old, but they could be very useful to schools, especially in rural areas, that may not have a big budget to buy fancy new computers.

I am fortunate to represent Washington State, which is very aggressive in trying to put computers in the classroom. Our companies have been generous in donating software and hardware, and people are excited about giving kids skills that will help them get an edge in life.

But not every school district is moving aggressively on computers. Many don't even know how to go about it, and cannot afford it. I am certain that every Senator is aware of how fast technology is evolving in our economy. I really believe that, in the future, a child's ability to compete in the work force will be measured in part by his or her familiarity with computers. In my view, the earlier they start, the better.

The Senate will debate the broad role of Government in education technology, and I look forward to having that debate. For now there is a small, and I think constructive, role for the Senate to play. We can use the bully pulpit. We can lead by example. We can help children by giving our computers to schools that want or need them. By doing this, we can help some kids, and we can show the country we think bringing technology to the classroom is a high priority.

Here is how it will work: the Sergeant at Arms will make sure that any excess or surplus computers are in good working order. Then he will make them available to interested schools at the lowest possible cost to both the Senate and the schools. Most likely, he will transfer these computers to the General Services Administration. GSA, in turn, will provide information to schools through its regional offices about available inventory. The equipment eligible for transfer will include computers, keyboards, monitors, printers, modems, and other peripheral hardware as described in the bill.

I envision schools being able to obtain this equipment on a first-come, first-served basis, for the cost of shipping and handling from GSA regional offices. The language provides the Sergeant at Arms with flexibility to determine the best way to complete the transfers.

Earlier this year, President Clinton issued an executive order stating that the GSA should document surplus computers in Federal agencies. And in May, I offered a sense-of-the-Senate resolution expressing the view that the Senate should also inventory its computers and create a process of getting Government computers into schools and other educational organizations. The language in the bill before us sets out a specific process so the Senate can play a role in this important effort.

Mr. President, I think this is a useful change in policy. I am grateful the committee has acted today in a manner consistent with my amendment as adopted last May. And, I welcome the support of Senator LEAHY, who has taken an active and enthusiastic interest in this issue. He has been a big help. Again, I appreciate the help of Chairman MACK on this, and I look forward to working with him and the Sergeant at Arms to make this work.●

● Mr. LEAHY. I rise in strong support of Senator MURRAY's language in the legislative appropriations bill. This language would require the Senate to streamline the transfer of excess and surplus computer equipment to our Nation's classrooms. It would require the Senate to follow the same guidelines that the Federal agencies must follow in accordance with the President's Federal Executive Order.

President Clinton has set forth an ambitious goal to bring computers to every school in America. Congress should lead the way. Thanks to Senator MURRAY's efforts, the Senate will be participating in this initiative.

Recently, I wrote several letters to the Sergeant at Arms to find out what our official Senate policy is concerning disposal of excess surplus computer equipment. I was surprised to hear that the Senate does not have an official policy. In the past the Senate has sold excess computer equipment or transferred it over to GSA for later sale. Since 1993, the Senate disposed of 4,400 pieces of computer equipment. Of that total 2,600 have been sold, 1,400 have been transferred to GSA, and 400 have been retained for parts. These computers would have been a wonderful resource to our Nation's schools.

I encourage my colleagues to join our efforts in creating a partnership with our nation's schools and bring computers to every classroom in America so that all students may have the benefits of our new educational technology.●

CBO ESTIMATE ON S. 1730, THE OIL SPILL PREVENTION AND RESPONSE IMPROVEMENT ACT

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD supplemental budgetary estimates on Calendar Number 466, S. 1730, the Oil Spill Prevention and Response Improvement Act of 1996. Section 403 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Act requires that a statement of the cost of a reported bill be included in the report. When the Committee on Environment and Public Works filed the report to S. 1730 on June 26, 1996, we included only a portion of the estimated impact of the bill. CBO had not completed the estimated impact at the time of filing. I am pleased to report that the cost statements to be included in today's RECORD complete the CBO estimate for S. 1730.

The estimates follow:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 17, 1996.

Hon. JOHN H. CHAFEE,
Chairman, Committee on Environment and Public Works, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed mandate cost statements for S. 1730, the Oil Spill Prevention and Response Improvement Act, as reported by the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works on June 26, 1996. CBO transmitted its estimate of the impact of S. 1730 on the federal budget on June 26, 1996.

Enactment of S. 1730 would impose both intergovernmental and private-sector mandates as defined by the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995 (Public Law 104-4). The costs of the mandates would not exceed the respective $50 million and $100 million annual thresholds.

If you wish further details on these estimates, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

JAMES L. BLUM

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE ESTIMATED COST OF INTERGOVERNMENTAL MANDATES, JULY 17, 1996

1. Bill number: S. 1730.

2. Bill title: The Oil Spill Prevention and Response Improvement Act.

3. Bill status: As reported by the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works on June 26, 1996.

4. Bill purpose: The bill would amend federal law dealing with oil pollution by: imposing new operational, structural, and safety requirements on tanker and towing vessels; allowing more funds to be spent out of the emergency fund of the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund; and limiting the liability of certain tanker vessels that have double hulls and are responsible for oil spills.

5. Intergovernmental mandates contained in bill:

Vessel Requirements. The bill would require the Secretary of Transportation to incorporate additional measures in three sets of rules being proposed by the Coast Guard. The rules deal with navigational equipment for towing vessels and operational and structural requirements for tanker vessels that have a single hull and weigh more than 5,000 gross tons. These requirements are intergovernmental mandates because a small fraction of these vessels, less than 2 percent, are owned by state, local, and tribal governments.

Under-Keel Clearance. S.1730 would preempt the authority of captains of ports to establish minimum under-keel clearances in their ports by requiring the Secretary of Transportation to establish minimum under-keel clearances for each port. This preemption constitutes an intergovernmental mandate because ports are owned by state and local governments or their subsidiaries. However, this preemption might occur under current law. The Coast Guard is about to issue a final rule regarding structural and operational measures for tanker vessels that have a single hull and weigh more than 5,000 gross tons. The Coast Guard's proposed rule would prohibit vessels with an under-keel clearance of less than 0.5 meters from entering or exiting a port without the approval of the captain of the port.

6. Estimated direct costs of mandates to State, local, and tribal governments:

(a) Is the $50 Million Threshold Exceeded? No.

(b) Total Direct Costs of Mandates: The new requirements on tanker and towing vessels owned by state, local, or tribal governments would have a negligible effect on their budgets. Preempting the authority of port captains to establish a minimum under-keel clearance for their ports would have no direct impact on the budgets of ports.

(c) Estimate of Necessary Budget Authority: Not applicable.

7. Basis of estimate:

Vessel Requirements. S. 1730 would modify three rulemakings that the Coast Guard is currently carrying out. If the final rules are not in place by the dates specified in the bill (all of which are in the next six months), S. 1730 would require that the proposed rules be in effect until the final rules are put in place.

Based on information provided by the Coast Guard, CBO expects that all the final rules will be in place by the deadlines specified in the bill or by October 1, 1996, the assumed enactment date of the bill. Enactment of S. 1730 should therefore not result in the rules being imposed earlier than they would otherwise be imposed under current law. If the Coast Guard does not meet the deadlines, however, the shipping industry would face about $15 million per month in additional costs because it would have to comply with the proposed rules at an earlier date than would occur under current law. Vessels owned by state, local, and tribal governments would bear a small fraction of these costs.

The bill would also require the Coast Guard to add additional requirements to its final rules, such as fire suppression equipment on towing vessels and safety measures for single-hull barges. CBO estimates that the up-front costs for the shipping industry as a whole would be no more than $18 million and annual operational costs would be minimal. Because less than 2 percent of these vessels are owned by state, local, and tribal governments, the cost of these intergovernmental mandates would be negligible.

Under-Keel Clearance. Preempting the authority of port captains to establish a minimum under-keel clearance for their ports would have no direct impact on the budgets of ports. Ports could experience indirect costs, however; these costs are discussed below in the section titled "Other Impacts On State, Local, and Tribal Governments."

8. Appropriation or other federal financial assistance provided in bill to cover mandate costs: None.

9. Other impacts on State, local, and tribal governments:

Under-Keel Clearance. The current proposed rule for tanker vessels includes a minimum under-keel clearance that would apply uniformly to all ports. Because the shipping industry and port authorities have objected to a national standard, it is unclear whether the final rule will set a minimum under-keel clearance. The bill would settle the dispute by requiring the Secretary of Transportation to establish a separate minimum clearance for each port. CBO has no basis for predicting whether these standards would be more or less stringent than the standards that would be established under current law.

If the clearance requirements are less stringent than the requirement under current law, ports would not incur additional costs. If the clearance requirements are more stringent, ports could choose to increase their under-keel clearance and could face additional costs for activities such as dredging in order to avoid losing business to deeper ports. Because the enforceable duty would be imposed on operators of vessels, not on ports, such costs would be considered an indirect effect of a mandate.

Spending from the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund (OSLTF). CBO estimates that federal direct spending from the emergency fund of the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund (OSLTF) would increase by $40 million (from $20 million to $60 million) in fiscal year 1997 and by $45 million (from $15 million to $60 million) annually thereafter.

These increases would result from broadening how the funds can be used and by increasing the overall cap on direct spending from $50 million to $60 million. (Even though the current annual cap is $50 million, we expect that spending from the emergency fund will be between $15 million and $20 million annually under current law.) CBO expects that some of these additional funds would go to the states.

States currently have the legal and operational responsibility to cap idle oil wells. This bill would allow emergency funds from the OSLTF to pay for some of these costs, but the states would have to pay at least half. In addition, some of the costs associated with oil spills that are often paid for by states, including the full cost of assessing damages to natural resources and mitigating ecological injuries, would now be an eligible use of OSLTF emergency funds.

Limit on Oil Spill Liability. Current law caps the liability of parties who are responsible for oil spills. However, the cap does not apply to cases where federal safety, construction, or operating regulations are violated. S. 1730 would extend the liability cap to these cases if the tanker involved has a double hull. State, local, and tribal governments are often the recipients of awards from liability claims. Because the bill would expand the cases to which the liability cap applies, state, local, and tribal governments may receive smaller awards in future liability cases.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE ESTIMATE OF COSTS OF PRIVATE SECTOR MANDATES, JULY 17, 1996

1. Bill number: S. 1730.

2. Bill title: The Oil Spill Prevention and Response Improvement Act.

3. Bill status: As reported by the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works on June 26, 1996.

4. Bill purpose: The bill would amend provisions of the Oil Pollution Act of 1990 (OPA) that address oil spill prevention and safety measures.

5. Private sector mandates contained in bill:

S. 1730 would require the Secretary of Transportation to incorporate additional mandates in the operational, structural, and navigational rules currently proposed by the U.S. Coast Guard. In addition, the bill would put into effect the Coast Guard's current proposed rules by specified dates (all of which occur within the next six months) if the Coast Guard's final rules are not effective by deadlines specified under current law. The rules address navigational and safety equipment for towing vessels and operational and structural requirements for tanker vessels that have a single hull and weight more than 5,000 gross tons.

Based on information provided by the U.S. Coast Guard, CBO assumes that the final rules will be effective by the specified deadlines or by October 1, 1996, the assumed enactment date of the bill. CBO also assumes that the Coast Guard's final operational, structural, and navigational rules will reflect the respective currently proposed rules. If the Coast Guard does not meet the specified deadlines, the shipping industry would incur additional costs because the industry would have to comply with interim rules sooner than under current law. In addition, S. 1730 would require the final operational rule to include specific safety requirements to prevent the grounding of single-hull barges and the establishment of a minimum under-keel clearance for those vessels. The final navigational rule would have to include a requirement that towing vessels have fire-suppression systems. Further, advertisements that currently indicate the designation and procedures by which claims may be presented would also have to announce that claimants may present interim claims for short-term damages.

6. Estimated direct cost to the private sector:

S. 1730 would impose private-sector mandates that would most likely fall below the annual threshold as defined in Public Law 104-4. In the unlikely event that the Coast Guard's operational rule is delayed seven months after S. 1730 is enacted, costs could exceed the $100 million threshold in the first year.

Interim Rules. If S. 1730 were to be enacted before the Coast Guard's final operational rule is effective, the bill would impose interim private-sector mandates for operational activities. The interim operational rule would be identical to the proposed operational rule published by the Coast Guard in the Supplemental Notice of proposed Rulemaking (60 Fed. Reg. 55,904 (1995)), and would be in effect until the Coast Guard's final rule is effective. Based on information contained in the proposed rule, CBO estimates that the mandates imposed by the interim rule would cost the private sector approximately $15 million per month during the first year the interim rule is in effect. After the first year, the annual costs would decline. The costs imposed by the interim operational rule would not exceed the $100 million threshold unless the Coast Guard's final operational rule is still not effective seven months after S. 1730 is enacted.

S. 1730 also would impose an interim rule on vessel structure that would be identical to the proposed rule published by the Coast Guard in the Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (58 Fed. Reg. 54,870 (1993)) if the final structural rule is not effective by December 18, 1996. In the event that the final structural rule is not effective before the deadline, compliance with the proposed structural rule would not be required for three years. Therefore, the private sector would not likely make structural changes during the interim.

Similarly, the bill would impose an interim navigational rule if the Coast Guard's final rule on safety equipment for towing vessel does not become effective by September 30, 1996. The interim navigational rule would be identical to the proposed rule published by the Coast Guard in the Notice Proposed Rulemaking (58 Fed. Reg. 54,870 (1993)). In the event that the final navigational rule is not effective before the deadline, the private sector would not likely make any significant changes during the interim since compliance with some of the provisions would not be required for one to five years.

New Rulemaking Requirements. Under section 101 of the bill, the final rule on operational requirements must include a provision requiring all single-hull barges over 5,000 gross tons operating in open ocean or coastal waters to have at least one of the following: (1) a crew member on board and an operable anchor, (2) an emergency system on board the vessel towing the barge, or (3) any other measure that provides similar protection. Based on discussions with industry representatives, CBO estimates that the incremental cost of complying with this provision would be less than $1 million over five years.

Section 101 of the bill would require that the final operation rule include a provision requiring the establishment of a minimum under-keel clearance for each port in which a single-hull vessel operates. It is unclear if this provision would result in more or less stringent requirements than the 0.5 meter uniform under-keel clearance in the Coast Guard's proposed rule. The effect of this requirement would be to impose operational restrictions on such vessels not meeting the port's established under-keel clearance when entering or departing from the port and when operating in an inland or coastal waterway. If the effect of the under-keel clearance provision in the bill is to provide greater flexibility than the 0.5 meter uniform under-keel clearance in the proposed rule, then this provision of the bill would result in lower private-sector costs compared to the costs associated with the current proposed operational rule. However, if the bill leads to more stringent under-keel clearance requirements relative to current practice, this provision would result in increased costs to the private sector since vessels would have to lighter cargo or use alternative ports.

Section 103 would require that the final navigational rule include a provision requiring a towing vessel to have a fire-suppression system or other equipment to suppress an onboard fire. Based on information provided by the Coast Guard and the private sector, CBO estimates that this provision would result in costs to the private sector between $6 million and $18 million during the first year for installation and a minimal amount for operating costs thereafter.

Advertising Requirements. S. 1730 would impose an additional mandate concerning the advertising requirements in the Oil Pollution Act of 1990. Currently, the responsible party or guarantor of an incident must advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented. Section 201 would require that such advertisements must also announce that claimants may present interim claims for short-term damages. CBO estimates that the additional advertising requirement would impose minimal costs on the private sector.

"CAN DOLE ESCAPE SENATE LEADERS' POOR PRESIDENTIAL RECORD?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, Prof. Garrison Nelson is one of our country's foremost experts on Congress and the Presidency, and Vermont has been lucky to call him our own during his tenure at the University of Vermont. He recently wrote an interesting column for Roll Call about the historical record of Senate leaders who run for president. It is an entertaining and informative analysis that I hope other Senators will have a chance to read.

I ask that an article entitled "Can Dole Escape Senate Leaders' Poor Presidential Record?" be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

CAN DOLE ESCAPE SENATE LEADERS' POOR PRESIDENTIAL RECORD?

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole's (R-Kan) decision to resign from office in the midst of his presidential campaign isn't so surprising when you take into account the history of Republican Senate leaders in presidential contests.

That's because, almost without exception, a Congressional leadership post has been the kiss of death for White House aspirants.

Dole is the latest of several Congressional leaders throughout the nation's history who have sought the presidency. Whether he, by abandoning his post, will have more success than others did remains to be seen.

In a recent assessment, I found some 112 broadly defined "blips" made by Congressional leaders on the presidential radar screen from 1856 through 1966. These "blips" represent instances of Congressional leaders who appeared anywhere on the presidential (or vice presidential) charts—whether in delegate votes at the nominating conventions, or popular votes during the presidential primaries, or in discernible mentions in public opinion speculations about candidacies.

Some of these "blips" were trivial: "favorite son" votes at the convention or passing mentions in the opinion polls. But others had real meaning.

Prior to the passage in 1912 of the 17th Amendment, which instituted direct election of Senators, House leaders had a clear edge over Senate counterparts in the presidential calculus of the party kingmakers who put tickets together. This was particularly true to Republican conventions, which gave House leaders 20 considerations to only six for Senate leaders during the selections made in some 15 conventions.

While the Democratic conventions in the 1856–1912 era may have divided their presidential and vice presidential considerations for Congressional leaders between the two chambers equally—11 to 11—the point was relatively moot because Republican nominees won 11 of the 15 presidential contests.

Not until 1964 was a Democratic Congressional leader nominated for president: Lyndon Johnson (Texas), who had begun his executive service as vice president and was already seated as president at the time of the convention.

Republican Congressional leaders have been more successful at gaining the presidential brass ring. The first Republican Congressional leader to be nominated for the top executive post was House Speaker Schuyler Colfax (Ind), who was nominated and elected as Ulysses S. Grant's first vice president in 1868.

Four times in the 20 years between 1880 and 1900, past and present House floor leaders were nominated for president by Republican conventions.

Since then, almost a century has passed, and only one House Republican leader has been nominated for either post and that was Gerald Ford's 1976 selection as president. But Ford was already president at the time, albeit unelected, and had not made it onto the presidential screen at any time during his nine-year stint as House Republican floor leader.

Senate leaders have been slow to develop as nominees. While two sitting Senators were nominated and elected—Ohio's Warren Harding in 1920 and Massachusetts's John Kennedy in 1960—it is important to remember that neither held a leadership post.

It was not until 1928 that the nominating conventions took serious note of sitting Senate floor leaders. That year, both parties chose their respective Senate floor leaders as vice presidential candidates. Republican Charles Curtis of Kansas ran with Commerce Secretary Herbert Hoover while Democrat Joseph Robinson of Arkansas ran with New York Gov. Al Smith.

House Democrats were the least likely to be nominated, with their 18 considerations generating only two vice presidential nominations—both for Speaker "Cactus" Jack Garner of Texas in 1932 and 1936. But both nominations were successful. Running with FDR made the cantankerous former Speaker electable.

House Republicans picked off six nominations for their 26 considerations—double the rate of the House Democrats. But only one occurred in the past 90 years.

Senate Democratic leaders garnered the most considerations (41), as well as the most presidential and vice presidential nominations (seven). All four of their victories came after World War II. Among them were: Majority Leader Alben Barkley (Ky.) for vice president in 1948; Majority Leader Johnson for vice president in 1960 and president in 1964; and Whip Hubert Humphrey for vice president in 1964.

But it is Senate Republican leaders who seem to have encountered the most difficulty. They received 27 considerations, but only five nominations—only one of which was for president (Dole, this year, which has yet to be officially confirmed).

Their four vice presidential nominations produced only one victory—Curtis in 1928. So the 26 considerations which the Senate Republican leaders received prior to 1996 produced one vice presidential victory—a success rate of 4 percent, the lowest for any of the four Congressional leadership categories.

Even though it was a fellow Kansan who earned the lone victory by a Senate Republican leader, clearly Dole made the right move in getting out of the Senate. He has escaped the Temple of Presidential Doom.

Now if he can just convince voters that he never held a leadership post there, he might be able to move up in the polls and avoid the kiss of death that those posts seem to be in presidential politics.•

TRIBUTE TO TIMOTHY MARQUIS, JOANNE MILLETTE, SYMA MIRZA, AND KENNETH JOHNSON ON BEING SELECTED AS PRESIDENTIAL SCHOLARS FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Timothy Marquis, Joanne Millette, Syma Myrza, and Kenneth Johnson and congratulate them on being named White House Presidential Scholars. These students were among the 141 students chosen for this prestigious award from more than 2,600 high school seniors. Last month, these New Hampshire students were in Washington to participate in special events highlighting Presidential Scholars National Recognition Week.

The Presidential Scholars Program was created by President Lyndon B. Johnson in 1964 to honor our Nation's most outstanding students. In 1979, the program was expanded to include accomplished students from the visual, creative, and performing arts. This year, the General Motors and Saturn companies sponsored the Presidential Scholars Program and the events in Washington.

Timothy, Joanne, Syma, and Kenneth are four outstanding New Hampshire students who have worked very hard to achieve academic excellence. Their dedication deserves this special recognition. They were selected as Presidential scholars on the basis of academic success, essays, school recommendations, leadership, character, and commitment to high ideals. One of the primary goals of this program is to help young people recognize the value of their accomplishments. In addition to receiving this award, each student was asked to name the teacher who most influenced them during their high school career. These teachers are named as a National Distinguished Teacher and are invited to participate in the National Recognition Week.

These students have worked hard to achieve excellence and this award honors their hard work and perseverance. These students are remarkable because they have achieved not only academic excellence, but are also leaders in their schools and dedicated to community service. Each student has given back to the community that nurtured them. I am proud to recognize these four outstanding young people as New Hampshire's finest and congratulate them on the receipt of the White House Presidential Scholars Award.•

HENRY PESTKA

• Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise today to honor a man who has overcome great adversity to become a pillar of his community, Henry Pestka of Grand Rapids, MI.

Henry Pestka was born in Poland on July 29, 1922, the son of Saul and Marie Pestka. Saul Pestka was a builder and developer who taught his son his craft. After the Nazi occupation of Poland, Henry was interned in a number of concentration camps, including the notorious Auschwitz Death Camp.

In 1944, Pestka and two other prisoners escaped during a forced death march, and were found by members of the Free French Army. Henry joined the Polish Battalion of the Free French Army. He has the unique distinction of being not only one of the few survivors of Auschwitz Death Camp, but also a decorated combat veteran of the Allied cause in the Second World War. Tragically, both his parents and siblings perished. Henry was the only survivor.

In 1946, at the urging of his only living relatives, Henry immigrated to the United States and settled in Grand Rapids, MI. When Henry arrived, he could not speak English. He enrolled in night classes at Union High School and was given employment by a friend of his father's from Poland. In short, Henry came to the United States without money, with a very limited family, and unable to speak English.

In December 1948, Henry married Beatrice Bergman. Prior to the marriage, Henry had started working at Bergman Auto Supplies, selling auto parts and installing seat covers. In the late 1950's, Henry and his partner, Herman Bergman, began purchasing and developing property using the lessons gleaned from his father as a boy in Poland. For the past 40 years, Henry has developed shopping centers, office buildings, restaurants, apartment complexes, and industrial buildings. He has worked with major companies, both in the Grand Rapids area and across the United States.

Henry's proudest achievement was his tenure as building chairman for Congregation Ahavas Israel. He devoted a year of his life to this project and served without fee. Ultimately, in 1971, the beautiful structure was completed. At the time, Henry was honored by the Grand Rapids mayor, Bob Boelens, and by the entire congregation. In the foyer of the synagogue is an affecting mural depicting the 6 million innocent victims of Nazi genocide. In his own way, Henry has contributed not only to the memory of those who perished, but also built an institution to serve future generations including his own grandchildren.

Henry's philanthropy is legendary, particularly toward those institutions fighting bigotry or helping the sick and disabled. Among the organizations which he has consistently supported are the Anti-Defamation League, the Southern Poverty Law Center, the U.S. Holocaust Museum, the American Cancer Society, the American Heart Association, the Arthritis Foundation, St. Jude's Children's Hospital, and the Salvation Army. On a local level, Henry has supported Hope Network, Project Rehab, and many, many others.

His life has been a testament to overcoming horrific adversity and prevailing. He has built a uniquely American life, for which he can be forever proud. I know that my Senate colleague will join me in honoring Henry Pestka.•

CALIFORNIA CITIES FIGHT JUNK GUNS

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, earlier this year, I introduced legislation to prohibit the sale and manufacture of Junk Guns, or as they are also called, Saturday Night Specials. The importation of these cheap, easily concealable, and unsafe weapons has been prohibited since 1968, but their domestic production continues to soar.

In 1995, eight of the ten firearms most frequently traced at crime scenes were junk guns. These guns are the criminals' choice, and we must act now to get them out of our schools and our communities. Nationwide, gun violence is now the second leading cause of death of among children. In California, gun violence is number one. For the sake of our children, we must pass the Junk Gun Violence Protection Act.

My bill has received strong support from California's law enforcement leaders. The California Police Chiefs Association has endorsed my bill along with more than two dozen individual police chiefs and sheriffs representing some of California's largest cities and counties.

Today, I want to report on an extraordinary event that occurred last week in Oakland. On July 8, the mayors of 15 cities in California's East Bay joined together and pledged to get junk guns off the streets of their communities. These mayors said that they were frustrated by the 104th Congress' unwillingness to enact the common sense reforms that my bill would make. Although they acknowledge that Federal legislation would be more effective than local ordinances, they have decided not to wait until Washington gets the message that these guns must be taken off our streets.

The cities of West Hollywood, San Francisco, Oakland, and Alameda have already passed ordinances to ban the sales of junk guns. More than a dozen municipalities in Alameda and Contra Costa counties are expected to follow soon. When junk guns are banned in these East Bay communities, it will create the largest junk gun-free zone in the country.

The courageous actions taken by these East Bay mayors provides real momentum to the movement to ban junk guns nationwide. I commend these communities for their leadership, and once again, I urge my colleagues to support S. 1654, the Junk Gun Violence Protection Act.

I ask that the following articles be printed in the RECORD.

The articles follow:

[From the Oakland Tribune, July 18, 1996]

ALAMEDA JOINS EAST BAY CITIES IN SHOOTING DOWN JUNK GUNS

(By Kathleen Kirkwood)

ALAMEDA.—The City Council has joined other East Bay cities in approving an ordinance banning the sale of junk guns; the so-called Saturday night specials.

The ordinance is patterned after a similar law in West Hollywood, now facing a court challenge on the grounds it is preempted by state regulations.

Several gun owners appealed to the Alameda council Tuesday to reject the law, saying it was a sham and couldn't be enforced because of overriding state law. Even if it were imposed, it couldn't stem the tide of gun-related crimes anyway, Herb Leong of San Francisco said.

"I don't believe this is a law that's worth your effort," Leong said. "What we need to do is change people. We can't change what they do by taking away a tool."

Local gun dealer James Figone said he doesn't sell junk guns, which are usually cheap and unreliable. But he said the city would be infringing on constitutional rights to bear arms.

"The whole point of these laws is to take guns out of the public's hands," Figone said.

Figone and others also criticized the ordinance's lack of a specific list of which guns would be targeted.

Instead, it states that the police chief will issue a list of firearms, at a future date, that meets the description of guns to be banned.

Generally, they're defined as cheap, poorly-manufactured, short-barreled handguns, Police Chief Barry Matthews said.

Matthews passed around five junk guns to council members that had been confiscated by Alameda police, calling them "garbage" weapons and "messengers of death."

He said it was hard to tell what effect the junk gun ban would have if imposed in Alameda.

"There will be a difference—to what degree I can't say," Matthews said.

In 1993, he said, junk handguns accounted for 8 out of 10 firearms most frequently confiscated by police in California. An estimated 90 percent of such guns available in the United States are manufactured in California. Import of such guns into the United States is already banned.

The mayors and police chiefs of 21 cities in the East Bay are backing the ordinance, hoping to send a signal to legislators.

"Maybe it won't stop smuggling or crime," Mayor Ralph Appezzato said. "Symbolic? Maybe, maybe not. But we've got to try."

Alameda was among seven cities along the I–880 corridor to approve or at least study the junk gun ordinance ban in the first reading of the law this week.

Oakland and Berkeley have given the ban approval on a second reading, which is required for final passage.

REGION TAKES THE LEAD TO CORRAL 'JUNK GUNS'

The new push by Bay Area civic leader's to take "junk guns" out of circulation probably won't take the weapons off the streets altogether. But it is likely to have some success. And it stands as a powerful statement by those who lead our local governments: We've had enough, and we're going to work together, as a region, to solve this problem.

"We are standing together, and sending a message that no matter where you live, in what city or county, violence is there and we need to do something about it," said Berkeley Mayor Shidey Dean, chairwoman of the East Bay Public Safety Corridor Partnership.

The partnership, the largest regional approach to fighting junk guns in the nation, encompasses Fremont, Newark, Union City, Hayward, San Leandro, Alameda, Berkeley, Oakland, Piedmont, Albany, Emeryville, El Cerrito, Richmond, San Pablo and Pinole. Dean wants other cities to join.

San Francisco and Alameda County have already outlawed the weapons, and San Jose is considering a ban.

The regional approach is being taken up by Bay Area politicians who have given up on the federal and state governments. "Politicians on the state and federal level, quite frankly, are afraid of the gun lobby," said Oakland Mayor Elihu Harris.

Junk guns, also known as Saturday night specials, are, generally speaking, poorly constructed and therefore less safe. They also are less expensive to buy. More technical definitions will be refined by those who write the local ordinances banning them. Suffice it to say, junk guns are easy to get and dangerous to use. They are used by gangs and considered status symbols.

BAY AREA HOMICIDES

People are dropping like flies in the Bay Area because of the availability of guns. Between 1991 and 1993, six out of every eight homicides in Alameda County involved a firearm, according to the Alameda County Injury Prevention program. Homicide rates were highest for those between 20 and 24.

If this push is going to succeed, other cities are going to have to climb on board. Several are considering gun bans. We urge them to follow through.

At least one East Bay civic leader, Dublin Mayor Guy Houston, wants no part of the regional gun ban. Using rhetoric that sounds as though it were written for him by the National Rifle Association, Houston eschews a ban on murderous weapons and says tougher penalties are the solution to the gun problem. The "Three Strikes, You're Out" law is taking care of the problem, Houston says.

Tougher penalties are fine, but by themselves they have not done the job. More is needed. At least Houston didn't utter the old NRA line, "Guns don't kill people; people kill people." That's true; people do kill people—with guns. Fewer guns, fewer deaths.•

AUTHORIZING SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL REPRESENTATION

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, on behalf of the Democratic leader, I send to the desk a resolution to authorize representation by the Senate counsel, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 281) to authorize representation by Senate legal counsel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, the plaintiff in Lockhart versus United States brought a civil action in May 1996 in Federal District Court in the Western District of Washington. The suit is against the United States and a number of legislative, executive, and judicial branch officials, including Senator LOTT and then-Senator Dole, as well as various members of President Clinton's Cabinet. The plaintiff seeks damages for a variety of injuries that he alleges the defendants inflicted upon him. The complaint's only connection with the majority leader and former Senator Dole consists of vague references to statutes that Congress has passed or repealed.

The complaint fails to establish any legitimate grievance with Senator LOTT or Senator Dole. This resolution authorizes the Senate Legal Counsel to represent these Members in this action.

Mr. DODD. I ask unanimous consent the resolution be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 281) was considered and agreed to as follows:

S. RES. 281

Whereas, in the case of James Lockhart v. United States, et al., No. C95-1858Z, pending in the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, the plaintiff has named Senator Trent Lott and former Senator Robert J. Dole as defenders;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(1) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. §§288b(a) and 288c(a) (1) (1994), the Senate may direct its counsel to defend its Members in civil actions relating to their official responsibilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is authorized to represent Senator Lott and former Senator Dole in the case of James Lockhart v. United States, et al.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Comittee on Labor and Human Resources, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu therefore the following:

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, child abuse is a critical issue facing our Nation. Each year, close to 1 million children are abused or neglected and as a result, in need of assistance and out of home care. CAPTA is a small but vital link in the provision of these services.

S. 919, which was unanimously reported by the Senate Labor Committee nearly 1-year ago, streamlines State plan and reporting requirements; eliminates unnecessary research and technical assistance activities; and encourages local innovation through a restructured demonstration program.

Additionally, we have consolidated the Child Abuse Community Based Prevention Grants, Family Resource Centers, Family Support Centers into the Community and Family Resource and Support Grants.

Finally, S. 919 repeals the Temporary Child Care for Children with Disabilities and Crisis Nurseries Act, Title VII (F) of the McKinney Homeless Assistance Act, and the Emergency Child Abuse Prevention Grants.

Mr. President, each day, hundreds of children and families come into contact with, and are affected by, our nation's child protective system. For many, it is a frightening experience. For others—for those on the front lines, it is sometimes an opportunity to rescue children from horrific circumstances.

Unfortunately, the issues facing this overburdened system are seldom easily resolved. Too often—overworked, under paid, untrained, and sometimes overzealous caseworkers have a tremendous and devastating impact on families.

Decisions are routinely made to remove children and place them in foster care—into situations that are sometimes more dangerous than the one they were removed from. Other times, because of mounting paperwork and case files, a serious case goes uninvestigated—or a decision to return a child to an unsafe home is made because there are no more out of home placements available. These are all difficult circumstances that require balance, training, and resources.

Since 1974, CAPTA, through a relatively small program, has assisted states in meeting child protection needs. It is a small, but important program, because it mandates have radically changed how we view child protection.

Unfortunately, not all of these changes have been helpful. CAPTA has, until now, been viewed as a very prescriptive program, with States judged, not on how well they protect children, but on how close they come to mirroring Federal requirements.

The 1995 CAPTA Amendments are an important first step toward addressing some of the problems in CAPTA while at the same time, building upon its strengths. Most experts agree that what CAPTA can do, and do best, is provide guidance to states; assist States with training and technical assistance; and promote better research and dissemination of information while allowing for maximum flexibility in approach and response. With that in mind, S. 919:

Eliminates unnecessary bureaucracy by repealing mandates for a National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect, the U.S. Advisory Board, and the Interagency Task force on Child Abuse. Instead, the Secretary may use discretion in deciding whether or not they are an essential function.

Restructures and consolidates various research functions into one coordinated effort.

Places a significant emphasis on local experimentation by expanding Demonstration Grants to encourage local innovation and experimentation. One of these areas involves a triage system approach which we heard very exciting reports about during a Subcommittee on Children and Families hearing. Others include training for mandatory reporters, families, service providers, and communities and a demonstration program for kinship care as an alternative to foster care placements.

Reforms the Basic State Grant by allowing greater flexibility to the States in determining the circumstances and intensity of intervention that is required, while encouraging them to look to other preventative services that can be provided to families, where intensive intervention is not called for.

Determining the appropriate level of intervention is a very important consideration. We have studied closely the numbers of abuse and neglect reports that have been filed. Of the close to 3 million reports that have been filed, only one-third are eventually substantiated. This means that over 2 million are either unsubstantiated or false. And while I know that these numbers and their interpretation are the source of some disagreement, the fact remains that for whatever reason, over 2 million investigations at some level, are occurring, and possibly resulting in inappropriate interventions—including removal of the child from the home.

Members of the Labor Committee may recall the testimony of Jim Wade who spoke of his three year ordeal, in which his daughter was wrongfully removed from his home. I have received many such reports and complaints, and while we should be mindful not to legislate by anecdote, these stories involve real people and are chilling.

With the State grant, we have worked to find ways to improve reporting so that caseworkers are able to assess and effectively respond to cases of abuse and neglect with an appropriate response. S. 919 stresses the importance of case workers using risk assessment procedures to ensure that priority attention is given to those children who are at great risk of harm. I think particularly of the tragic case of Elisa Izquierdo of Brooklyn, the 6 year-old girl brutally murdered by her mother on the day before Thanksgiving this past year. Elisa was well known to the overburdened case workers who were assigned to monitor her, however it appears that they simply didn't have enough time to keep a close watch on Elisa, nor maybe enough training to realize the tremendous seriousness of her situation. S. 919's focus on better training and the use of risk assessment procedures should help to improve the safety of children.

We have also ensured that persons who maliciously file reports of abuse or neglect will not longer be protected by CAPTA's immunity for reporting. Only good faith reports will be protected.

Finally, we have clarified the definition of child abuse or neglect to provide additional guidance and clarification to states as they endeavor to protect children from abuse and neglect.

Let me briefly mention the other programs authorized in the 1995 CAPTA Amendments: the Community and Family Resource Grants is the result of nearly a full year's effort to consolidate the Community Based Prevention Grant, Respite Care Program, and Family Resource Programs; the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act which provides assistance to States primarily for shelters; the Adoption Opportunities Act which supports aggressive efforts to strengthen the capacity of States to find permanent homes for children with special needs; the Abandoned Infants Assistance Act which provides for the needs of children who are abandoned, especially those with AIDS; the Children's Justice Act; and the Missing Children's Assistance Act and Section 214 of the Victims of Child Abuse Act.

Mr. President, I would like to thank the Members for their attention. These are important programs and they will affect many children and families. I urge the adoption of the 1995 CAPTA Amendments.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read, and agreed to, the committee amendment be agreed to, the bill be deemed read a third time, passed, as amended, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the bill be placed at the appropriate place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4926) was agreed to.

The bill (S. 919), as amended, was deemed read a third time, and passed.

(The text of the bill will be printed in a future Edition of the RECORD.)

Subtitle A—Promulgation of National Primary Drinking Water Regulations

SEC. 101. SELECTION OF ADDITIONAL CONTAMINANTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1412(b)(3) (42 U.S.C. 300g–1(b)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) REGULATION OF UNREGULATED CONTAMINANTS.—

"(A) LISTING OF CONTAMINANTS FOR CONSIDERATION.—(i) Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996 and every 5 years thereafter, the Administrator, after consultation with the scientific community, including the Science Advisory Board, after notice and opportunity for public comment, and after considering the occurrence data base established under section 1445(g), shall publish a list of contaminants which, at the time of publication, are not subject to any proposed or promulgated national primary drinking water regulation, which are known or anticipated to occur in public water systems, and which may require regulation under this title.

"(ii) The unregulated contaminants considered under clause (i) shall include, but not be limited to, substances referred to in section 101(14) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, and substances registered as pesticides under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act.

"(iii) The Administrator's decision whether or not to select an unregulated contaminant for a list under this subparagraph shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(B) DETERMINATION TO REGULATE.—(i) Not later than 5 years after the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996, and every 5 years thereafter, the Administrator shall, by rule, for not fewer than 5 contaminants included on the list published under subparagraph (A), make determinations of whether or not to regulate such contaminants.

"(ii) A determination to regulate a contaminant shall be based on findings that—

"(I) the contaminant is known to occur or there is a substantial likelihood that the contaminant will occur in public water systems with a frequency and at a level of public health concern; and

"(II) regulation of such contaminant presents a meaningful opportunity for public health risk reduction for persons served by public water systems.

Such findings shall be based on the best available public health information, including the occurrence data base established under section 1445(g).

"(iii) The Administrator may make a determination to regulate a contaminant that does not appear on a list under subparagraph (A) if the determination to regulate is made pursuant to clause (ii).

"(iv) A determination under this subparagraph not to regulate a contaminant shall be considered final agency action and subject to judicial review.

"(C) PRIORITIES.—In selecting unregulated contaminants for consideration under subparagraph (B), the Administrator shall select contaminants that present the greatest public health concern. The Administrator, in making such selection, shall take into consideration, among other factors of public health concern, the effect of such contaminants upon subgroups that comprise a meaningful portion of the general population (such as infants, children, pregnant women, the elderly, individuals with a history of serious illness, or other subpopulations) that are identifiable as being at greater risk of adverse health effects due to exposure to contaminants in drinking water than the general population.

"(D) REGULATION.—For each contaminant that the Administrator determines to regulate under subparagraph (B), the Administrator shall promulgate, by rule, maximum contaminant level goals and national primary drinking water regulations under this subsection. The Administrator shall propose the maximum contaminant level goal and national primary drinking water regulation not later than 24 months after the determination to regulate under subparagraph (B), and may publish such proposed regulation concurrent with the determination to regulate. The Administrator shall promulgate a maximum contaminant level goal and national primary drinking water regulation within 18 months after the proposal thereof. The Administrator, by notice in the Federal Register, may extend the deadline for such promulgation for up to 9 months.

"(E) HEALTH ADVISORIES AND OTHER ACTIONS.—The Administrator may publish health advisories (which are not regulations) or take other appropriate actions for contaminants not subject to any national primary drinking water regulation.".

(b) APPLICABILITY OF PRIOR REQUIREMENTS.—The requirements of subparagraphs (C) and (D) of section 1412(b)(3) of title XIV of the Public Health Service Act (commonly known as the Safe Drinking Water Act) as in effect before the enactment of this Act, and any obligation to promulgate regulations pursuant to such subparagraphs not promulgated as of the date of enactment of this Act, are superseded by the amendments made by subsection (a) to such subparagraphs (C) and (D).

SEC. 102. DISINFECTANTS AND DISINFECTION BYPRODUCTS.

Section 1412(b)(3) (42 U.S.C. 300g–1(b)(3)) is amended by adding at the end the following subparagraph:

"(F) DISINFECTANTS AND DISINFECTION BYPRODUCTS.—

"(i) INFORMATION COLLECTION RULE.—Not later than December 31, 1996, the Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, promulgate an information collection rule to obtain information that will facilitate further revisions to the national primary drinking water regulation for disinfectants and disinfection byproducts, including information on microbial contaminants such as cryptosporidium. The Administrator may extend the December 31, 1996, deadline under this clause for up to 180 days if the Administrator determines that progress toward approval of an appropriate analytical method to screen for cryptosporidium is sufficiently advanced and approval is likely to be completed within the additional time period.

"(ii) ADDITIONAL DEADLINES.—The time intervals between promulgation of a final information collection rule, an Interim Enhanced Surface Water Treatment Rule, a Final Enhanced Surface Water Treatment Rule, a Stage I Disinfectants and Disinfection Byproducts Rule, and a Stage II Disinfectants and Disinfection Byproducts Rule shall be in accordance with the schedule published in volume 59, Federal Register, page 6361 (February 10, 1994), in table III.13 of the proposed Information Collection Rule. If a delay occurs with respect to the promulgation of any rule in the timetable established by this subparagraph, all subsequent rules shall be completed as expeditiously as practicable but no later than a revised date that reflects the interval or intervals for the rules in the timetable.".

SEC. 103. LIMITED ALTERNATIVE TO FILTRATION.

Section 1412(b)(7)(C) is amended by adding the following after clause (iv):

"(v) As an additional alternative to the regulations promulgated pursuant to clauses (i) and (iii), including the criteria for avoiding filtration contained in CFR 141.71, a State exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems may, on a case-by-case basis, and after notice and opportunity for public comment, establish treatment requirements as an alternative to filtration in the case of systems having uninhabited, undeveloped watersheds in consolidated ownership, and having control over access to, and activities in, those watersheds, if the State determines (and the Administrator concurs) that the quality of the source water and the alternative treatment requirements established by the State ensure greater removal or inactivation efficiencies of pathogenic organisms for which national primary drinking water regulations have been promulgated or that are of public health concern than would be achieved by the combination of filtration and chlorine disinfection (in compliance with paragraph (8)).".

SEC. 104. STANDARD-SETTING.

(1) In paragraph (4)—

(A) by striking "(4) Each" and inserting the following:

"(4) GOALS AND STANDARDS.—

"(A) MAXIMUM CONTAMINANT LEVEL GOALS.—Each";

(B) in the last sentence—

(i) by striking "Each national" and inserting the following:

"(B) MAXIMUM CONTAMINANT LEVELS.— Except as provided in paragraphs (5) and (6), each national"; and

(ii) by striking "maximum level" and inserting "maximum contaminant level"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(C) DETERMINATION.—At the time the Administrator proposes a national primary drinking water regulation under this paragraph, the Administrator shall publish a determination as to whether the benefits of the maximum contaminant level justify, or do not justify, the costs based on the analysis conducted under paragraph (12)(C).".

(2) By striking "(5) For the" and inserting the following:

"(D) DEFINITION OF FEASIBLE.—For the".

(3) In the second sentence of paragraph (4)(D) (as so designated), by striking "paragraph (4)" and inserting "this paragraph".

(4) By striking "(6) Each national" and inserting the following:

"(E) FEASIBLE TECHNOLOGIES.—

"(i) Each national".

(5) In paragraph (4)(E)(i) (as so designated), by striking "this paragraph" and inserting "this subsection".

(6) By inserting after paragraph (4) (as so amended) the following:

"(5) ADDITIONAL HEALTH RISK CONSIDERATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraph (4), the Administrator may establish a maximum contaminant level for a contaminant at a level other than the feasible level, if the technology, treatment techniques, and other means used to determine the feasible level would result in an increase in the health risk from drinking water by—

"(i) increasing the concentration of other contaminants in drinking water; or

"(ii) interfering with the efficacy of drinking water treatment techniques or processes that are used to comply with other national primary drinking water regulations.

"(B) ESTABLISHMENT OF LEVEL.—If the Administrator establishes a maximum contaminant level or levels or requires the use of treatment techniques for any contaminant or contaminants pursuant to the authority of this paragraph—

"(i) the level or levels or treatment techniques shall minimize the overall risk of adverse health effects by balancing the risk from the contaminant and the risk from other contaminants the concentrations of which may be affected by the use of a treatment technique or process that would be employed to attain the maximum contaminant level or levels; and

"(ii) the combination of technology, treatment techniques, or other means required to meet the level or levels shall not be more stringent than is feasible (as defined in paragraph (4)(D)).

"(6) ADDITIONAL HEALTH RISK REDUCTION AND COST CONSIDERATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraph (4), if the Administrator determines based on an analysis conducted under paragraph (12)(C) that the benefits of a maximum contaminant level promulgated in accordance with paragraph (4) would not justify the costs of complying with the level, the Administrator may, after notice and opportunity for public comment, promulgate a maximum contaminant level for the contaminant that maximizes health risk reduction benefits at a cost that is justified by the benefits.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—The Administrator shall not use the authority of this paragraph to promulgate a maximum contaminant level for a contaminant, if the benefits of compliance with a national primary drinking water regulation for the contaminant that would be promulgated in accordance with paragraph (4) experienced by—

"(i) persons served by large public water systems; and

"(ii) persons served by such other systems as are unlikely, based on information provided by the States, to receive a variance under section 1415(e) (relating to small system assistance program); would justify the costs to the systems of complying with the regulation. This subparagraph shall not apply if the contaminant is found almost exclusively in small systems (as defined in section 1415(e), relating to small system assistance program).

"(C) DISINFECTANTS AND DISINFECTION BYPRODUCTS.—The Administrator may not use the authority of this paragraph to establish a maximum contaminant level in a Stage I or Stage II national primary drinking water regulation for contaminants that are disinfectants or disinfection byproducts (as described in paragraph (3)(F)), or to establish a maximum contaminant level or treatment technique requirement for the control of cryptosporidium. The authority of this paragraph may be used to establish regulations for the use of disinfection by systems relying on ground water sources as required by paragraph (8).

"(D) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—A determination by the Administrator that the benefits of a maximum contaminant level or treatment requirement justify or do not justify the costs of complying with the level shall be reviewed by the court pursuant to section 1448 only as part of a review of a final national primary drinking water regulation that has been promulgated based on the determination and shall not be set aside by the court under that section unless the court finds that the determination is arbitrary and capricious.".

(b) DISINFECTANTS AND DISINFECTION BYPRODUCTS.—The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency may use the authority of section 1412(b)(5) of the Public Health Service Act (as amended by this Act) to promulgate the Stage I and Stage II rules for disinfectants and disinfection byproducts as proposed in volume 59, Federal Register, page 38668 (July 29, 1994). The considerations used in the development of the July 29, 1994, proposed national primary drinking water regulation on Disinfection and Disinfection Byproducts shall be treated as consistent with such section 1412(b)(5) for purposes of such Stage I and Stage II rules.

(c) REVIEW OF STANDARDS.—Section 1412(b)(9) (42 U.S.C. 300g–1(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(9) REVIEW AND REVISION.—The Administrator shall, not less often than every 6 years, review and revise, as appropriate, each national primary drinking water regulation promulgated under this title. Any revision of a national primary drinking water regulation shall be promulgated in accordance with this section, except that each revision shall maintain, or provide for greater, protection of the health of persons.".

SEC. 105. GROUND WATER DISINFECTION.

Section 1412(b)(8) (42 U.S.C. 300g–1(b)(8)) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following: "At any time after the end of the 3-year period that begins on the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996, but not later than the date on which the Administrator promulgates a Stage II rulemaking for disinfectants and disinfection byproducts (as described in paragraph (3)(F)(ii)), the Administrator shall also promulgate national primary drinking water regulations requiring disinfection as a treatment technique for all public water systems, including surface water systems and, as necessary, ground water systems. After consultation with the States, the Administrator shall (as part of the regulations) promulgate criteria that the Administrator, or a State that has primary enforcement responsibility under section 1413, shall apply to determine whether disinfection shall be required as a treatment technique for any public water system served by ground water. A State that has primary enforcement authority shall develop a plan through which ground water disinfection determinations are made. The plan shall be based on the Administrator's criteria and shall be submitted to the Administrator for approval.".

SEC. 106. EFFECTIVE DATE FOR REGULATIONS.

Section 1412(b)(10) (42 U.S.C. 300g–1(b)(10)) is amended to read as follows:

"(10) EFFECTIVE DATE.—A national primary drinking water regulation promulgated under this section (and any amendment thereto) shall take effect on the date that is 3 years after the date on which the regulation is promulgated unless the Administrator determines that an earlier date is practicable, except that the Administrator, or a State (in the case of an individual system), may allow up to 2 additional years to comply with a maximum contaminant level or treatment technique if the Administrator or State (in the case of an individual system) determines that additional time is necessary for capital improvements.".

SEC. 107. RISK ASSESSMENT, MANAGEMENT, AND COMMUNICATION.

Section 1412(b) (42 U.S.C. 300g–1(b)) is amended by inserting after paragraph (11) the following:

"(12) RISK ASSESSMENT, MANAGEMENT AND COMMUNICATION.—

"(A) USE OF SCIENCE IN DECISIONMAKING.—In carrying out this section, and, to the degree that an Agency action is based on science, the Administrator shall use—

"(i) the best available, peer-reviewed science and supporting studies conducted in accordance with sound and objective scientific practices; and

"(ii) data collected by accepted methods or best available methods (if the reliability of the method and the nature of the decision justifies use of the data).

"(B) PUBLIC INFORMATION.—In carrying out this section, the Administrator shall ensure that the presentation of information on public health effects is comprehensive, informative and understandable. The Administrator shall, in a document made available to the public in support of a regulation promulgated under this section, specify, to the extent practicable—

"(i) each population addressed by any estimate of public health effects;

"(ii) the expected risk or central estimate of risk for the specific populations;

"(iii) each appropriate upper-bound or lower-bound estimate of risk;

"(iv) each significant uncertainty identified in the process of the assessment of public health effects and studies that would assist in resolving the uncertainty; and

"(v) peer-reviewed studies known to the Administrator that support, are directly relevant to, or fail to support any estimate of public health effects and the methodology used to reconcile inconsistencies in the scientific data.

"(C) HEALTH RISK REDUCTION AND COST ANALYSIS.—

"(i) MAXIMUM CONTAMINANT LEVELS.—When proposing any national primary drinking water regulation that includes a maximum contaminant level, the Administrator shall, with respect to a maximum contaminant level that is being considered in accordance with paragraph (4) and each alternative maximum contaminant level that is being considered pursuant to paragraph (5) or (6)(A), publish, seek public comment on, and use for the purposes of paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) an analysis of:

"(I) Quantifiable and nonquantifiable health risk reduction benefits for which there is a factual basis in the rulemaking record to conclude that such benefits are likely to occur as the result of treatment to comply with each level.

"(II) Quantifiable and nonquantifiable health risk reduction benefits for which there is a factual basis in the rulemaking record to conclude that such benefits are likely to occur from reductions in co-occurring contaminants that may be attributed solely to compliance with the maximum contaminant level, excluding benefits resulting from compliance with other proposed or promulgated regulations.

"(III) Quantifiable and nonquantifiable costs for which there is a factual basis in the rulemaking record to conclude that such costs are likely to occur solely as a result of compliance with the maximum contaminant level, including monitoring, treatment, and other costs and excluding costs resulting from compliance with other proposed or promulgated regulations.

"(IV) The incremental costs and benefits associated with each alternative maximum contaminant level considered.

"(V) The effects of the contaminant on the general population and on groups within the general population such as infants, children, pregnant women, the elderly, individuals with a history of serious illness, or other subpopulations that are identified as likely to be at greater risk of adverse health effects due to exposure to contaminants in drinking water than the general population.

"(VI) Any increased health risk that may occur as the result of compliance, including risks associated with co-occurring contaminants.

"(VII) Other relevant factors, including the quality and extent of the information, the uncertainties in the analysis supporting subclauses (I) through (VI), and factors with respect to the degree and nature of the risk.

"(ii) TREATMENT TECHNIQUES.—When proposing a national primary drinking water regulation that includes a treatment technique in accordance with paragraph (7)(A), the Administrator shall publish and seek public comment on an analysis of the health risk reduction benefits and costs likely to be experienced as the result of compliance with the treatment technique and alternative treatment techniques that are being considered, taking into account, as appropriate, the factors described in clause (i).

"(iii) APPROACHES TO MEASURE AND VALUE BENEFITS.—The Administrator may identify valid approaches for the measurement and valuation of benefits under this subparagraph, including approaches to identify consumer willingness to pay for reductions in health risks from drinking water contaminants.

"(iv) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator, acting through the Office of Ground Water and Drinking Water, to conduct studies, assessments, and analyses in support of regulations or the development of methods, $35,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1996 through 2003.".

SEC. 108. RADON, ARSENIC, AND SULFATE.

Section 1412(b) is amended by inserting after paragraph (12) the following:

"(13) CERTAIN CONTAMINANTS.—

"(A) RADON.—Any proposal published by the Administrator before the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996 to establish a national primary drinking water standard for radon shall be withdrawn by the Administrator. Notwithstanding any provision of any law enacted prior to the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996, within 3 years of such date of enactment, the Administrator shall propose and promulgate a national primary drinking water regulation for radon under this section, as amended by the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996. In undertaking any risk analysis and benefit cost analysis in connection with the promulgation of such standard, the Administrator shall take into account the costs and benefits of control programs for radon from other sources.

"(B) ARSENIC.—(i) Notwithstanding the deadlines set forth in paragraph (1), the Administrator shall promulgate a national primary drinking water regulation for arsenic pursuant to this subsection, in accordance with the schedule established by this paragraph.

"(ii) Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this paragraph, the Administrator shall develop a comprehensive plan for study in support of drinking water rulemaking to reduce the uncertainty in assessing health risks associated with exposure to low levels of arsenic. In conducting such study, the Administrator shall consult with the National Academy of Sciences, other Federal agencies, and interested public and private entities.

"(iii) In carrying out the study plan, the Administrator may enter into cooperative agreements with other Federal agencies, State and local governments, and other interested public and private entities.

"(iv) The Administrator shall propose a national primary drinking water regulation for arsenic not later than January 1, 2000.

"(v) Not later than January 1, 2001, after notice and opportunity for public comment, the Administrator shall promulgate a national primary drinking water regulation for arsenic.

"(vi) There are authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1997 through 2001 for the studies required by this paragraph.

"(C) SULFATE.—

"(i) ADDITIONAL STUDY.—Prior to promulgating a national primary drinking water regulation for sulfate, the Administrator and the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention shall jointly conduct an additional study to establish a reliable dose-response relationship for the adverse human health effects that may result from exposure to sulfate in drinking water, including the health effects that may be experienced by groups within the general population (including infants and travelers) that are potentially at greater risk of adverse health effects as the result of such exposure. The study shall be conducted in consultation with interested States, shall be based on the best available, peer-reviewed science and supporting studies conducted in accordance with sound and objective scientific practices.

"(ii) PROPOSED AND FINAL RULE.—Notwithstanding the deadlines set forth in paragraph (1), the Administrator may, pursuant to the authorities of this subsection and after notice and opportunity for public comment, promulgate a final national primary drinking water regulation for sulfate. Any such regulation shall include requirements for public notification and options for the provision of alternative water supplies to populations at risk as a means of complying with the regulation in lieu of a best available treatment technology or other means.".

SEC. 109. URGENT THREATS TO PUBLIC HEALTH.

Section 1412(b) is amended by inserting the following after paragraph (13):

"(14) URGENT THREATS TO PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Administrator may promulgate an interim national primary drinking water regulation for a contaminant without making a determination for the contaminant under paragraph (4)(C) or completing the analysis under paragraph (12)(C) to address an urgent threat to public health as determined by the Administrator after consultation with and written response to any comments provided by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention or the director of the National Institutes of Health. A determination for any contaminant in accordance with paragraph (4)(C) subject to an interim regulation under this subparagraph shall be issued, and a completed analysis meeting the requirements of paragraph (12)(C) shall be published, not later than 3 years after the date on which the regulation is promulgated and the regulation shall be repromulgated, or revised if appropriate, not later than 5 years after that date.".

Section 1412(b) is amended by adding the following new paragraph after paragraph (14):

"(15) RECYCLING OF FILTER BACKWASH.—The Administrator shall promulgate a regulation to govern the recycling of filter backwash water within the treatment process of a public water system. The Administrator shall promulgate such regulation not later than 4 years after the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996 unless such recycling has been addressed by the Administrator's 'enhanced surface water treatment rule' prior to such date.".

SEC. 111. TREATMENT TECHNOLOGIES FOR SMALL SYSTEMS.

(a) LIST OF TECHNOLOGIES FOR SMALL SYSTEMS.—Section 1412(b)(4)(E) (42 U.S.C. 300g-1(b)(4)(E)), is amended by adding at the end the following:

Point-of-entry and point-of-use treatment units shall be owned, controlled and maintained by the public water system or by a person under contract with the public water system to ensure proper operation and maintenance and compliance with the maximum contaminant level or treatment technique and equipped with mechanical warnings to ensure that customers are automatically notified of operational problems. If the American National Standards Institute has issued product standards applicable to a specific type of point-of-entry or point-of-use treatment unit, individual units of that type shall not be accepted for compliance with a maximum contaminant level or treatment technique requirement unless they are independently certified in accordance with such standards.

"(iii) Except as provided in clause (v), not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this clause and after consultation with the States, the Administrator shall issue a list of technologies that achieve compliance with the maximum contaminant level or treatment technique for each category of public water systems described in subclauses (I), (II), and (III) of clause (ii) for each national primary drinking water regulation promulgated prior to the date of the enactment of this paragraph.

"(iv) The Administrator may, at any time after a national primary drinking water regulation has been promulgated, supplement the list of technologies describing additional or new or innovative treatment technologies that meet the requirements of this paragraph for categories of small public water systems described in subclauses (I), (II) and (III) of clause (ii) that are subject to the regulation.

"(v) Within one year after the enactment of this clause, the Administrator shall list technologies that meet the surface water treatment

"(4) CONSUMER CONFIDENCE REPORTS BY COMMUNITY WATER SYSTEMS.—

"(A) ANNUAL REPORTS TO CONSUMERS.—The Administrator, in consultation with public water systems, environmental groups, public interest groups, risk communication experts, and the States, and other interested parties, shall issue regulations within 24 months after the date of the enactment of this paragraph to require each community water system to mail to each customer of the system at least once annually a report on the level of contaminants in the drinking water purveyed by that system (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as a 'consumer confidence report'). Such regulations shall provide a brief and plainly worded definition of the terms 'maximum contaminant level goal' and 'maximum contaminant level' and brief statements in plain language regarding the health concerns that resulted in regulation of each regulated contaminant. The regulations shall also provide for an Environmental Protection Agency toll-free hot-line that consumers can call for more information and explanation.

"(vi) A statement that more information about contaminants and potential health effects can be obtained by calling the Environmental Protection Agency hot line.

A public water system may include such additional information as it deems appropriate for public education. The Administrator may, for not more than 3 regulated contaminants other than those referred to in subclause (IV) of clause (iii), require a consumer confidence report under this paragraph to include the brief statement in plain language regarding the health concerns that resulted in regulation of the contaminant or contaminants concerned, as provided by the Administrator in regulations under subparagraph (A).

Subtitle D—Exemptions and Variances

SEC. 141. EXEMPTIONS.

(a) SYSTEMS SERVING FEWER THAN 3,300 PERSONS.—Section 1416 is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(h) SMALL SYSTEMS.—(1) For public water systems serving fewer than 3,300 persons, the maximum exemption period shall be 4 years if the State is exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems and determines that—

"(A) the public water system cannot meet the maximum contaminant level or install Best Available Affordable Technology ('BAAT') due in either case to compelling economic circumstances (taking into consideration the availability of financial assistance under section 1452, relating to State Revolving Funds) or other compelling circumstances;

"(B) the public water system could not comply with the maximum contaminant level through the use of alternate water supplies;

"(C) the granting of the exemption will provide a drinking water supply that protects public health given the duration of exemption; and

"(D) the State has met the requirements of paragraph (2).

"(2)(A) Before issuing an exemption under this section or an extension thereof for a small public water system described in paragraph (1), the State shall—

"(i) examine the public water system's technical, financial, and managerial capability (taking into consideration any available financial assistance) to operate in and maintain compliance with this title, and

"(ii) determine if management or restructuring changes (or both) can reasonably be made that will result in compliance with this title or, if compliance cannot be achieved, improve the quality of the drinking water.

"(B) Management changes referred to in subparagraph (A) may include rate increases, accounting changes, the hiring of consultants, the appointment of a technician with expertise in operating such systems, contractual arrangements for a more efficient and capable system for joint operation, or other reasonable strategies to improve capacity.

"(C) Restructuring changes referred to in subparagraph (A) may include ownership change, physical consolidation with another system, or other measures to otherwise improve customer base and gain economies of scale.

"(D) If the State determines that management or restructuring changes referred to in subparagraph (A) can reasonably be made, it shall require such changes and a schedule therefore as a condition of the exemption. If the State determines to the contrary, the State may still grant the exemption. The decision of the State under this subparagraph shall not be subject to review by the Administrator, except as provided in subsection (d).

"(3) Paragraphs (1) and (3) of subsection (a) shall not apply to an exemption issued under this subsection. Subparagraph (B) of subsection (b)(2) shall not apply to an exemption issued under this subsection, but any exemption granted to such a system may be renewed for additional 4-year periods upon application of the public water system and after a determination that the criteria of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection continue to be met.

"(4) No exemption may be issued under this section for microbiological contaminants.".

(b) LIMITED ADDITIONAL COMPLIANCE PERIOD.—At the end of section 1416(h) insert:

"(5)(A) Notwithstanding this subsection, the State of New York, on a case-by-case basis and after notice and an opportunity of at least 60 days for public comment, may allow an additional period for compliance with the Surface Water Treatment Rule established pursuant to section 1412(b)(7)(C) in the case of unfiltered systems in Essex, Columbia, Greene, Dutchess, Rennsselaer, Schoharie, Saratoga, Washington, and Warren Counties serving a population of less than 5,000, which meet appropriate disinfection requirements and have adequate watershed protections, so long as the State determines that the public health will be protected during the duration of the additional compliance period and the system agrees to implement appropriate control measures as determined by the State.

"(B) The additional compliance period referred to in subparagraph (A) shall expire on the earlier of the date 3 years after the date on which the Administrator identifies appropriate control technology for the Surface Water Treatment Rule for public water systems in the category that includes such system pursuant to section 1412(b)(4)(E) or 5 years after the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996.".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 1416(b)(1) is amended by striking "prescribed by a State pursuant to this subsection" and inserting "prescribed by a State pursuant to this subsection or subsection (h)".

(4) Section 1416(b)(2)(C) is repealed.

(d) SYSTEMS SERVING MORE THAN 3,300 PERSONS.—Section 1416(b)(2)(A)(ii) is amended by striking "12 months" and inserting "4 years" and section 1416(b)(2)(B) is amended by striking "3 years after the date of the issuance of the exemption" and inserting "4 years after the expiration of the initial exemption".

SEC. 142. VARIANCES.

(a) BAAT VARIANCE.—Section 1415 (42 U.S.C. 300g–4) is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(e) SMALL SYSTEM ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—

"(1) BAAT VARIANCES.—In the case of public water systems serving 3,300 persons or fewer, a variance under this section shall be granted by a State which has primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems allowing the use of Best Available Affordable Technology in lieu of best technology or other means where—

"(A) no best technology or other means is listed under section 1412(b)(4)(E) for the applicable category of public water systems;

"(B) the Administrator has identified BAAT for that contaminant pursuant to paragraph (3); and

"(C) the State finds that the conditions in paragraph (4) are met.

"(2) DEFINITION OF BAAT.—The term 'Best Available Affordable Technology' or 'BAAT' means the most effective technology or other means for the control of a drinking water contaminant or contaminants that is available and affordable to systems serving fewer than 3,300 persons.

"(3) IDENTIFICATION OF BAAT.—(A) As part of each national primary drinking water regulation proposed and promulgated after the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996, the Administrator shall identify BAAT in any case where no 'best technology or other means' is listed for a category of public water systems listed under section 1412(b)(4)(E). No such identified BAAT shall require a technology from a specific manufacturer or brand. BAAT need not be adequate to achieve the applicable maximum contaminant level or treatment technique, but shall bring the public water system as close to achievement of such maximum contaminant level as practical or as close to the level of health protection provided by such treatment technique as practical, as the case may be. Any technology or other means identified as BAAT must be determined by the Administrator to be protective of public health. Simultaneously with identification of BAAT, the Administrator shall list any assumptions underlying the public health determination referred to in the preceding sentence, where such assumptions concern the public water system to which the technology may be applied, or its source waters. The Administrator shall provide the assumptions used in determining affordability, taking into consideration the number of persons served by such systems. Such listing shall provide as much reliable information as practicable on performance, effectiveness, limitations, costs, and other relevant factors in support of such listing, including the applicability of BAAT to surface and underground waters or both.

"(B) To the greatest extent possible, within 36 months after the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996, the Administrator shall identify BAAT for all national primary drinking water regulations promulgated prior to such date of enactment where no best technology or other means is listed for a category of public water systems under section 1412(b)(4)(E), and where compliance by such small systems is not practical. In identifying BAAT for such national primary drinking water regulations, the Administrator shall give priority to evaluation of atrazine, asbestos, selenium, pentachlorophenol, antimony, and nickel.

"(4) CONDITIONS FOR BAAT VARIANCE.—To grant a variance under this subsection, the State must determine that—

"(A) the public water system cannot install 'best technology or other means' because of the system's small size;

"(B) the public water system could not comply with the maximum contaminant level through use of alternate water supplies or through management changes or restructuring;

"(C) the public water system has the capacity to operate and maintain BAAT; and

"(D) the circumstances of the public water system are consistent with the public health assumptions identified by the Administrator under paragraph (3).

"(5) SCHEDULES.—Any variance granted by a State under this subsection shall establish a schedule for the installation and operation of BAAT within a period not to exceed 2 years after the issuance of the variance, except that the State may grant an extension of 1 additional year upon application by the system. The application shall include a showing of financial or technical need. Variances under this subsection shall be for a term not to exceed 5 years (including the period allowed for installation and operation of BAAT), but may be renewed for such additional 5-year periods by the State upon a finding that the criteria in paragraph (1) continue to be met.

"(6) REVIEW.—Any review by the Administrator under paragraphs (4) and (5) shall be pursuant to subsection (a)(1)(G)(i).

"(7) INELIGIBILITY FOR VARIANCES.—A variance shall not be available under this subsection for—

"(A) any maximum contaminant level or treatment technique for a contaminant with respect to which a national primary drinking water regulation was promulgated prior to January 1, 1986; or

"(B) a national primary drinking water regulation for a microbial contaminant (including a bacterium, virus, or other organism) or an indicator or treatment technique for a microbial contaminant.".

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING CHANGES.—

Section 1415 (42 U.S.C. 300g–4) is amended as follows:

(3) By amending the first sentence of subsection (a)(1)(C) to read as follows: "Before a variance is issued and a schedule is prescribed pursuant to this subsection or subsection (e) by a State, the State shall provide notice and an opportunity for a public hearing on the proposed variance and schedule.".

(4) By inserting "under this section" before the period at the end of the third sentence of subsection (a)(1)(C).

(5) By striking "under subparagraph (A)" and inserting "under this section" in subsection (a)(1)(D).

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO PART C

SEC. 201. SOURCE WATER QUALITY ASSESSMENT.

(a) GUIDELINES AND PROGRAMS.—Section 1428 is amended by adding “and source water” after “wellhead” in the section heading and by adding at the end thereof the following:

“(l) SOURCE WATER ASSESSMENT.—

“(1) GUIDANCE.—Within 12 months after enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996, after notice and comment, the Administrator shall publish guidance for States exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems to carry out directly or through delegation (for the protection and benefit of public water systems and for the support of monitoring flexibility) a source water assessment program within the State's boundaries.

“(2) PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.—A source water assessment program under this subsection shall—

“(A) delineate the boundaries of the assessment areas in such State from which one or more public water systems in the State receive supplies of drinking water, using all reasonably available hydrogeologic information on the sources of the supply of drinking water in the State and the water flow, recharge, and discharge and any other reliable information as the State deems necessary to adequately determine such areas; and

“(B) identify for contaminants regulated under this title for which monitoring is required under this title (or any unregulated contaminants selected by the State in its discretion which the State, for the purposes of this subsection, has determined may present a threat to public health), to the extent practical, the origins within each delineated area of such contaminants to determine the susceptibility of the public water systems in the delineated area to such contaminants.

“(3) APPROVAL, IMPLEMENTATION, AND MONITORING RELIEF.—A State source water assessment program under this subsection shall be submitted to the Administrator within 18 months after the Administrator's guidance is issued under this subsection and shall be deemed approved 9 months after the date of such submittal unless the Administrator disapproves the program as provided in subsection (c). States shall begin implementation of the program immediately after its approval. The Administrator's approval of a State program under this subsection shall include a timetable, established in consultation with the State, allowing not more than 2 years for completion after approval of the program. “(6) USE OF OTHER PROGRAMS.—To avoid duplication and to encourage efficiency, the program under this section shall, to the extent practicable, be coordinated with other existing programs and mechanisms, and may make use of any of the following:

“(A) Vulnerability assessments, sanitary surveys, and monitoring programs.

“(B) Delineations or assessments of ground water sources under a State wellhead protection program developed pursuant to this section.

“(C) Delineations or assessments of surface or ground water sources under a State pesticide management plan developed pursuant to the Pesticide and Ground Water State Management Plan Regulation (subparts I and J of part 152 of title 40, Code of Federal Regulations), promulgated under section 3(d) of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C. 136a(d)).

(2) Add after the second sentence of subsection (c)(1) the following: “A State program developed pursuant to subsection (l) or section 1418(b) shall be deemed to meet the applicable requirements of subsection (l) or section 1418(b) unless the Administrator determines within 9 months of the receipt of the program that such program (or portion thereof) does not meet such requirements.”.

(3) In the third sentence of subsection (c)(1) and in subsection (c)(2) strike “is inadequate” and insert “is disapproved”.

“(2) engaged in any activity at such facility resulting, or which may result, in the contamination of water supplies in any such area, or

“(3) owning or operating any public water system, shall be subject to, and comply with, all Federal, State, interstate, and local requirements, both substantive and procedural (including any requirement for permits or reporting or any provisions for injunctive relief and such sanctions as may be imposed by a court to enforce such relief), respecting the protection of such wellhead areas and respecting such public water systems in the same manner and to the same extent as any person is subject to such requirements, including the payment of reasonable service charges. The Federal, State, interstate, and local substantive and procedural requirements referred to in this subsection include, but are not limited to, all administrative orders and all civil and administrative penalties and fines, regardless of whether such penalties or fines are punitive or coercive in nature or are imposed for isolated, intermittent, or continuing violations. The United States hereby expressly waives any immunity otherwise applicable to the United States with respect to any such substantive or procedural requirement (including, but not limited to, any injunctive relief, administrative order or civil or administrative penalty or fine referred to in the preceding sentence, or reasonable service charge). The reasonable service charges referred to in this subsection include, but are not limited to, fees or charges assessed in connection with the processing and issuance of permits, renewal of permits, amendments to permits, review of plans, studies, and other documents, and inspection and monitoring of facilities, as well as any other nondiscriminatory charges that are assessed in connection with a Federal, State, interstate, or local regulatory program respecting the protection of wellhead areas or public water systems. Neither the United States, nor any agent, employee, or officer thereof, shall be immune or exempt from any process or sanction of any State or Federal Court with respect to the enforcement of any such injunctive relief. No agent, employee, or officer of the United States shall be personally liable for any civil penalty under any Federal, State, interstate, or local law concerning the protection of wellhead areas or public water systems with respect to any act or omission within the scope of the official duties of the agent, employee, or officer. An agent, employee, or officer of the United States shall be subject to any criminal sanction (including, but not limited to, any fine or imprisonment) under any Federal or State requirement adopted pursuant to this title, but no department, agency, or instrumentality of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government shall be subject to any such sanction. The President may exempt any facility of any department, agency, or instrumentality in the executive branch from compliance with such a requirement if he determines it to be in the paramount interest of the United States to do so. No such exemption shall be granted due to lack of appropriation unless the President shall have specifically requested such appropriation as a part of the budgetary process and the Congress shall have failed to make available such requested appropriation. Any exemption shall be for a period not in excess of 1 year, but additional exemptions may be granted for periods not to exceed 1 year upon the President's making a new determination. The President shall report each January to the Congress all exemptions from the requirements of this section granted during the preceding calendar year, together with his reason for granting each such exemption.

“(b) ADMINISTRATIVE PENALTY ORDERS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Administrator finds that a Federal agency has violated an applicable requirement under this title, the Administrator may issue a penalty order assessing a penalty against the Federal agency.

"(2) PENALTIES.—The Administrator may, after notice to the agency, assess a civil penalty against the agency in an amount not to exceed $25,000 per day per violation.

"(3) PROCEDURE.—Before an administrative penalty order issued under this subsection becomes final, the Administrator shall provide the agency an opportunity to confer with the Administrator and shall provide the agency notice and an opportunity for a hearing on the record in accordance with chapters 5 and 7 of title 5, United States Code.

"(4) PUBLIC REVIEW.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any interested person may obtain review of an administrative penalty order issued under this subsection. The review may be obtained in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia or in the United States District Court for the district in which the violation is alleged to have occurred by the filing of a complaint with the court within the 30-day period beginning on the date the penalty order becomes final. The person filing the complaint shall simultaneously send a copy of the complaint by certified mail to the Administrator and the Attorney General.

"(B) RECORD.—The Administrator shall promptly file in the court a certified copy of the record on which the order was issued.

"(C) STANDARD OF REVIEW.—The court shall not set aside or remand the order unless the court finds that there is not substantial evidence in the record, taken as a whole, to support the finding of a violation or that the assessment of the penalty by the Administrator constitutes an abuse of discretion.

"(D) PROHIBITION ON ADDITIONAL PENALTIES.—The court may not impose an additional civil penalty for a violation that is subject to the order unless the court finds that the assessment constitutes an abuse of discretion by the Administrator.

"(c) LIMITATION ON STATE USE OF FUNDS COLLECTED FROM FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.—Unless a State law in effect on the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996 or a State constitution requires the funds to be used in a different manner, all funds collected by a State from the Federal Government from penalties and fines imposed for violation of any substantive or procedural requirement referred to in subsection (a) shall be used by the State only for projects designed to improve or protect the environment or to defray the costs of environmental protection or enforcement.".

(b) CITIZEN ENFORCEMENT.—(1) The first sentence of section 1449(a) (42 U.S.C. 300j–8(a)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking ", or" and inserting a semicolon;

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; or"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(3) for the collection of a penalty by the United States Government (and associated costs and interest) against any Federal agency that fails, by the date that is 18 months after the effective date of a final order to pay a penalty assessed by the Administrator under section 1429(b), to pay the penalty.".

(2) Subsection (b) of section 1449 (42 U.S.C. 300j–8(b)) is amended, by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting "; or" and by adding the following new paragraph after paragraph (2):

"(3) under subsection (a)(3) prior to 60 days after the plaintiff has given notice of such action to the Attorney General and to the Federal agency.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1447 (42 U.S.C. 300j–6) is amended as follows:

(1) In subsection (a):

(A) In the first sentence, by striking "(1) having jurisdiction over any federally owned or maintained public water system or (2)".

(B) In the first sentence, by striking out "respecting the provision of safe drinking water and".

(C) In the second sentence, by striking "(A)", "(B)", and "(C)" and inserting "(1)", "(2)", and "(3)", respectively.

(2) In subsection (c), by striking "the Safe Drinking Water Amendments of 1977" and inserting "this title" and by striking "this Act" and inserting "this title".

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS REGARDING SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

SEC. 301. OPERATOR CERTIFICATION.

Section 1442 is amended by adding the following after subsection (e):

"(f) MINIMUM STANDARDS.—(1) Not later than 30 months after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996 and after consultation with States exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations specifying minimum standards for certification (and recertification) of the operators of community and nontransient noncommunity public water systems. Such regulations shall take into account existing State programs, the complexity of the system and other factors aimed at providing an effective program at reasonable cost to States and public water systems, taking into account the size of the system.

"(2) Any State exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems shall adopt and implement, within 2 years after the promulgation of regulations pursuant to paragraph (1), requirements for the certification of operators of community and nontransient noncommunity public water systems.

"(3) For any State exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems which has an operator certification program in effect on the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996, the regulations under paragraph (1) shall allow the State to enforce such program in lieu of the regulations under paragraph (1) if the State submits the program to the Administrator within 18 months after the promulgation of such regulations unless the Administrator determines (within 9 months after the State submits the program to the Administrator) that such program is not substantially equivalent to such regulations. In making this determination, such existing State programs shall be presumed to be substantially equivalent to the regulations, notwithstanding program differences, based on the size of systems or the quality of source water, providing State programs meet overall public health objectives of the regulations. If disapproved the program may be resubmitted within 6 months after receipt of notice of disapproval.".

SEC. 302. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

Section 1442(e) (42 U.S.C. 300j–1(e)), relating to technical assistance for small systems, is amended to read as follows:

"(e) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Administrator may provide technical assistance to small public water systems to enable such systems to achieve and maintain compliance with applicable national primary drinking water regulations. Such assistance may include circuit-rider programs, training, and preliminary engineering evaluations. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator to be used for such technical assistance $15,000,000 for fiscal years 1997 through 2003. No portion of any State revolving fund established under section 1452 (relating to State revolving funds) and no portion of any funds made available under this subsection may be used either directly or indirectly for lobbying expenses. Of the total amount appropriated under this subsection, 3 percent shall be used for technical assistance to public water systems owned or operated by Indian tribes.".

SEC. 303. PUBLIC WATER SYSTEM SUPERVISION PROGRAM.

Section 1443(a) (42 U.S.C. 300j–2(a)) is amended as follows:

(1) Paragraph (7) is amended to read as follows:

"(7) AUTHORIZATION.—FOR THE PURPOSE of making grants under paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1997 through 2003.".

(2) By adding at the end the following:

"(8) RESERVATION OF FUNDS BY THE ADMINISTRATOR.—If the Administrator assumes the primary enforcement responsibility of a State public water system supervision program, the Administrator may reserve from funds made available pursuant to this subsection, an amount equal to the amount that would otherwise have been provided to the State pursuant to this subsection. The Administrator shall use the funds reserved pursuant to this paragraph to ensure the full and effective administration of a public water system supervision program in the State.

"(9) STATE LOAN FUNDS.—For any fiscal year for which the amount made available to the Administrator by appropriations to carry out this subsection is less than the amount that the Administrator determines is necessary to supplement funds made available pursuant to paragraph (8) to ensure the full and effective administration of a public water system supervision program in a State, the Administrator may reserve from the funds made available to the State under section 1452 (relating to State revolving funds) an amount that is equal to the amount of the shortfall. This paragraph shall not apply to any State not exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems as of the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Amendments of 1996.".

SEC. 304. MONITORING AND INFORMATION GATHERING.

(a) REVIEW OF EXISTING REQUIREMENTS.—Paragraph (1) of section 1445(a) (42 U.S.C. 300j–4(a)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1)(A) Every person who is subject to any requirement of this title or who is a grantee, shall establish and maintain such records, make such reports, conduct such monitoring, and provide such information as the Administrator may reasonably require by regulation to assist the Administrator in establishing regulations under this title, in determining whether such person has acted or is acting in compliance with this title, in administering any program of financial assistance under this title, in evaluating the health risks of unregulated contaminants, or in advising the public of such risks. In requiring a public water system to monitor under this subsection, the Administrator may take into consideration the system size and the contaminants likely to be found in the system's drinking water.

"(B) Every person who is subject to a national primary drinking water regulation under section 1412 shall provide such information as the Administrator may reasonably require, after consultation with the State in which such person is located if such State has primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems, on a case-by-case basis, to determine whether such person has acted or is acting in compliance with this title.

"(C) Every person who is subject to a national primary drinking water regulation under section 1412 shall provide such information as the Administrator may reasonably require to assist the Administrator in establishing regulations under section 1412 of this title, after consultation with States and suppliers of water. The Administrator may not require under this subparagraph the installation of treatment equipment or process changes, the testing of treatment technology, or the analysis or processing of monitoring samples, except where the Administrator provides the funding for such activities. Before exercising this authority, the Administrator shall first seek to obtain the information by voluntary submission.

"(D) The Administrator shall not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this sentence, after consultation with public health experts, representatives of the general public, and officials of State and local governments, review the monitoring requirements for not fewer than 12 contaminants identified by the Administrator, and promulgate any necessary modifications.".

(b) MONITORING RELIEF.—Part B is amended by adding the following new section after section 1417:

"SEC. 1418. MONITORING OF CONTAMINANTS.

"(a) INTERIM MONITORING RELIEF AUTHORITY.—(1) A State exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems may modify the monitoring requirements for any regulated or unregulated contaminants for which monitoring is required other than microbial contaminants (or indicators thereof), disinfectants and disinfection byproducts or corrosion byproducts for an interim period to provide that any public water system serving 10,000 persons or fewer shall not be required to conduct additional quarterly monitoring during an interim relief period for such contaminants if—

"(A) monitoring, conducted at the beginning of the period for the contaminant concerned and certified to the State by the public water system, fails to detect the presence of the contaminant in the ground or surface water supplying the public water system, and

"(B) the State, (considering the hydrogeology of the area and other relevant factors), determines in writing that the contaminant is unlikely to be detected by further monitoring during such period.

"(2) The interim relief period referred to in paragraph (1) shall terminate when permanent monitoring relief is adopted and approved for such State, or at the end of 36 months after the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996, whichever comes first. In order to serve as a basis for interim relief, the monitoring conducted at the beginning of the period must occur at the time determined by the State to be the time of the public water system's greatest vulnerability to the contaminant concerned in the relevant ground or surface water, taking into account in the case of pesticides the time of application of the pesticide for the source water area and the travel time for the pesticide to reach such waters and taking into account, in the case of other contaminants, seasonality of precipitation and contaminant travel time.

"(b) PERMANENT MONITORING RELIEF AUTHORITY.—(1) Each State exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems under this title and having an approved wellhead protection program and a source water assessment program may adopt, in accordance with guidance published by the Administrator, and submit to the Administrator as provided in section 1428(c), tailored alternative monitoring requirements for public water systems in such State (as an alternative to the monitoring requirements for chemical contaminants set forth in the applicable national primary drinking water regulations) where the State concludes that (based on data available at the time of adoption concerning susceptibility, use, occurrence, wellhead protection, or from the State's drinking water source water assessment program) such alternative monitoring would provide assurance that it complies with the Administrator's guidelines. The State program must be adequate to assure compliance with, and enforcement of, applicable national primary drinking water regulations. Alternative monitoring shall not apply to regulated microbiological contaminants (or indicators thereof), disinfectants and disinfection by-products, or corrosion by-products. The preceding sentence is not intended to limit other authority of the Administrator under other provisions of this title to grant monitoring flexibility.

"(2)(A) The Administrator shall issue, after notice and comment and at the same time as guidelines are issued for source water assessment under section 1428(l), guidelines for States to follow in proposing alternative monitoring requirements under paragraph (1) of this subsection for chemical contaminants. The Administrator shall publish such guidelines in the Federal Register. The guidelines shall assure that the public health will be protected from drinking water contamination. The guidelines shall require that a State alternative monitoring program apply on a contaminant-by-contaminant basis and that, to be eligible for such alternative monitoring program, a public water system must show the State that the contaminant is not present in the drinking water supply or, if present, it is reliably and consistently below the maximum contaminant level.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the phrase 'reliably and consistently below the maximum contaminant level' means that, although contaminants have been detected in a water supply, the State has sufficient knowledge of the contamination source and extent of contamination to predict that the maximum contaminant level will not be exceeded. In determining that a contaminant is reliably and consistently below the maximum contaminant level, States shall consider the quality and completeness of data, the length of time covered and the volatility or stability of monitoring results during that time, and the proximity of such results to the maximum contaminant level. Wide variations in the analytical results, or analytical results close to the maximum contaminant level, shall not be considered to be reliably and consistently below the maximum contaminant level.

"(3) The guidelines issued by the Administrator under paragraph (2) shall require that if, after the monitoring program is in effect and operating, a contaminant covered by the alternative monitoring program is detected at levels at or above the maximum contaminant level or is no longer reliably or consistently below the maximum contaminant level, the public water system must either—

"(A) demonstrate that the contamination source has been removed or that other action has been taken to eliminate the contamination problem, or

"(B) test for the detected contaminant pursuant to the applicable national primary drinking water regulation.

"(c) TREATMENT AS NPDWR.—All monitoring relief granted by a State to a public water system for a regulated contaminant under subsection (a) or (b) shall be treated as part of the national primary drinking water regulation for that contaminant.

"(d) OTHER MONITORING RELIEF.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the authority of the States under applicable national primary drinking water regulations to alter monitoring requirements through waivers or other existing authorities. The Administrator shall periodically review and, as appropriate, revise such authorities.".

(c) UNREGULATED CONTAMINANTS.—Section 1445(a) (42 U.S.C. 300j–4(a)) is amended by striking paragraphs (2) through (8) and inserting the following:

"(2) MONITORING PROGRAM FOR UNREGULATED CONTAMINANTS.—

"(A) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Administrator shall promulgate regulations establishing the criteria for a monitoring program for unregulated contaminants. The regulations shall require monitoring of drinking water supplied by public water systems and shall vary the frequency and schedule for monitoring requirements for systems based on the number of persons served by the system, the source of supply, and the contaminants likely to be found.

"(B) MONITORING PROGRAM FOR CERTAIN UNREGULATED CONTAMINANTS.—

"(i) INITIAL LIST.—Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Amendments of 1996 and every 5 years thereafter, the Administrator shall issue a list pursuant to subparagraph (A) of not more than 40 unregulated contaminants to be monitored by public water systems and to be included in the national drinking water occurrence data base maintained pursuant to subsection (g).

"(ii) GOVERNORS' PETITION.—The Administrator shall include among the list of contaminants for which monitoring is required under this paragraph each contaminant recommended in a petition signed by the Governor of each of 7 or more States, unless the Administrator determines that the action would prevent the listing of other contaminants of a higher public health concern.

"(C) MONITORING PLAN FOR SMALL AND MEDIUM SYSTEMS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Based on the regulations promulgated by the Administrator, each State shall develop a representative monitoring plan to assess the occurrence of unregulated contaminants in public water systems that serve a population of 10,000 or fewer. The plan shall require monitoring for systems representative of different sizes, types, and geographic locations in the State.

"(ii) GRANTS FOR SMALL SYSTEM COSTS.—From funds appropriated under subparagraph (H), the Administrator shall pay the reasonable cost of such testing and laboratory analysis as are necessary to carry out monitoring under the plan.

"(D) MONITORING RESULTS.—Each public water system that conducts monitoring of unregulated contaminants pursuant to this paragraph shall provide the results of the monitoring to the primary enforcement authority for the system.

"(E) NOTIFICATION.—Notification of the availability of the results of monitoring programs required under paragraph (2)(A) shall be given to the persons served by the system and the Administrator.

"(F) WAIVER OF MONITORING REQUIREMENT.—The Administrator shall waive the requirement for monitoring for a contaminant under this paragraph in a State, if the State demonstrates that the criteria for listing the contaminant do not apply in that State.

"(G) ANALYTICAL METHODS.—The State may use screening methods approved by the Administrator under subsection (i) in lieu of monitoring for particular contaminants under this paragraph.

"(H) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this paragraph $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1997 through 2003.".

(d) SCREENING METHODS.—Section 1445 (42 U.S.C. 300j–4) is amended by adding the following after subsection (h):

"(i) SCREENING METHODS.—The Administrator shall review new analytical methods to screen for regulated contaminants and may approve such methods as are more accurate or cost-effective than established reference methods for use in compliance monitoring.".

SEC. 305. OCCURRENCE DATA BASE.

Section 1445 is amended by adding the following new subsection after subsection (f):

"(g) NATIONAL DRINKING WATER OCCURRENCE DATA BASE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996, the Administrator shall assemble and maintain a national drinking water occurrence data base, using information on the occurrence of both regulated and unregulated contaminants in public water systems obtained under subsection (a)(1)(A) or subsection (a)(2) and reliable information from other public and private sources.

''(2) PUBLIC INPUT.—In establishing the occurrence data base, the Administrator shall solicit recommendations from the Science Advisory Board, the States, and other interested parties concerning the development and maintenance of a national drinking water occurrence data base, including such issues as the structure and design of the data base, data input parameters and requirements, and the use and interpretation of data.

''(3) USE.—The data shall be used by the Administrator in making determinations under section 1412(b)(3) with respect to the occurrence of a contaminant in drinking water at a level of public health concern.

''(4) PUBLIC RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Administrator shall periodically solicit recommendations from the appropriate officials of the National Academy of Sciences and the States, and any person may submit recommendations to the Administrator, with respect to contaminants that should be included in the national drinking water occurrence data base, including recommendations with respect to additional unregulated contaminants that should be listed under subsection (a)(2). Any recommendation submitted under this clause shall be accompanied by reasonable documentation that—

''(A) the contaminant occurs or is likely to occur in drinking water; and

''(B) the contaminant poses a risk to public health.

''(5) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY.—The information from the data base shall be available to the public in readily accessible form.

''(6) REGULATED CONTAMINANTS.—With respect to each contaminant for which a national primary drinking water regulation has been established, the data base shall include information on the detection of the contaminant at a quantifiable level in public water systems (including detection of the contaminant at levels not constituting a violation of the maximum contaminant level for the contaminant).

''(7) UNREGULATED CONTAMINANTS.—With respect to contaminants for which a national primary drinking water regulation has not been established, the data base shall include—

''(A) monitoring information collected by public water systems that serve a population of more than 3,300, as required by the Administrator under subsection (a);

''(B) monitoring information collected by the States from a representative sampling of public water systems that serve a population of 3,300 or fewer; and

''(C) other reliable and appropriate monitoring information on the occurrence of the contaminants in public water systems that is available to the Administrator.''.

SEC. 306. CITIZENS SUITS.

Section 1449 (42 U.S.C. 300j-8) is amended by inserting '', or a State'' after ''prosecuting a civil action in a court of the United States'' in subsection (b)(1)(B).

SEC. 307. WHISTLE BLOWER.

(a) WHISTLE BLOWER.—Section 1450(i) is amended as follows:

(1) Amend paragraph (2)(A) by striking ''30 days'' and inserting ''180 days'' and by inserting before the period at the end ''and the Environmental Protection Agency''.

(2) Amend paragraph (2)(B)(i) by inserting before the last sentence the following: ''Upon conclusion of such hearing and the issuance of a recommended decision that the complaint has merit, the Secretary shall issue a preliminary order providing the relief prescribed in clause (ii), but may not order compensatory damages pending a final order.''.

(3) Amend paragraph (2)(B)(ii) by inserting ''and'' before ''(III)'' and by striking ''compensatory damages, and (IV) where appropriate, exemplary damages'' and inserting ''and the Secretary may order such person to provide compensatory damages to the complainant''.

(4) Redesignate paragraphs (3), (4), (5), and (6) as paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7), respectively, and insert after paragraph (2) the following:

''(3)(A) The Secretary shall dismiss a complaint filed under paragraph (1), and shall not conduct the investigation required under paragraph (2), unless the complainant has made a prima facie showing that any behavior described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of paragraph (1) was a contributing factor in the unfavorable personnel action alleged in the complaint.

''(B) Notwithstanding a finding by the Secretary that the complaint has made the showing required by paragraph (1)(A), no investigation required under paragraph (2) shall be conducted if the employer demonstrates, by clear and convincing evidence, that it would have taken the same unfavorable personnel action in the absence of such behavior.

''(C) The Secretary may determine that a violation of paragraph (1) has occurred only if the complainant has demonstrated that any behavior described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of paragraph (1) was a contributing factor in the unfavorable personnel action alleged in the complaint.

''(D) Relief may not be ordered under paragraph (2) if the employer demonstrates clear and convincing evidence that it would have taken the same unfavorable personnel action in the absence of such behavior.''.

(5) Add at the end the following:

''(8) This subsection may not be construed to expand, diminish, or otherwise affect any right otherwise available to an employee under Federal or State law to reduce the employee's discharge or other discriminatory action taken by the employer against the employee. The provisions of this subsection shall be prominently posted in any place of employment to which this subsection applies.''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to claims filed under section 1450(i) of the Public Health Service Act on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 308. STATE REVOLVING FUNDS.

Part E (42 U.S.C. 300j et seq.) is amended by adding the following new section after section 1451:

"SEC. 1452. STATE REVOLVING FUNDS.

''(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—

''(1) GRANTS TO STATES TO ESTABLISH REVOLVING FUNDS.—(A) The Administrator shall enter into agreements with eligible States to make capitalization grants, including letters of credit, to the States under this subsection solely to further the health protection objectives of this title, promote the efficient use of fund resources, and for such other purposes as are specified in this title.

''(B) To be eligible to receive a capitalization grant under this section, a State shall establish a drinking water treatment revolving loan fund and comply with the other requirements of this section.

''(C) Such a grant to a State shall be deposited in the drinking water treatment revolving fund established by the State, except as otherwise provided in this section and in other provisions of this title. No funds authorized by other provisions of this title to be used for other purposes specified in this title shall be deposited in any State revolving fund.

''(D) Such a grant to a State shall be available to the State for obligation during the fiscal year for which the funds are authorized and during the following fiscal year, except that grants made available from funds provided in Public Law 103–327, Public Law 103–124, and Public Law 104–134 shall be available for obligation during each of the fiscal years 1997 and 1998.

''(E) Except as otherwise provided in this section, funds made available to carry out this part shall be allotted to States that have entered into an agreement pursuant to this section in accordance with—

''(i) for each of fiscal years 1995 through 1997, a formula that is the same as the formula used to distribute public water system supervision grant funds under section 1443 in fiscal year 1995, except that the minimum proportionate share established in the formula shall be 1 percent of available funds and the formula shall be adjusted to include a minimum proportionate share for the State of Wyoming; and

''(ii) for fiscal year 1998 and each subsequent fiscal year, a formula that allocates to each State the proportional share of the State needs identified in the most recent survey conducted pursuant to section 1452(h), except that the minimum proportionate share provided to each State shall be the same as the minimum proportionate share provided under clause (i).

''(F) Such grants not obligated by the last day of the period for which the grants are available shall be reallotted according to the appropriate criteria set forth in subparagraph (E).

''(G) The State allotment for a State not exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems shall not be deposited in any such fund but shall be allotted by the Administrator as follows: 20 percent of such allotment shall be available to the Administrator as needed to exercise primary enforcement responsibility under this title in such State and the remainder shall be reallotted to States exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems for deposit in such funds. Whenever the Administrator makes a final determination pursuant to section 1413(b) that the requirements of section 1413(a) are no longer being met by a State, additional grants for such State under this title shall be immediately terminated by the Administrator. This subparagraph shall not apply to any State not exercising primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems as of the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996.

''(H)(i) Beginning in fiscal year 1999, the Administrator shall withhold 20 percent of each capitalization grant made pursuant to this section to a State if the State has not met the requirements of section 1419 (relating to capacity development).

''(ii) The Administrator shall withhold 20 percent of each capitalization grant made pursuant to this section if the State has not met the requirements of subsection (f) of section 1442 (relating to operator certification).

''(iii) All funds withheld by the Administrator pursuant to clause (i) shall be reallotted by the Administrator on the basis of the same ratio as is applicable to funds allotted under subparagraph (E). None of the funds reallotted by the Administrator pursuant to this paragraph shall be allotted to a State unless the State has met the requirements of section 1419 (relating to capacity development).

''(iv) All funds withheld by the Administrator pursuant to clause (ii) shall be reallotted by the Administrator on the basis of the same ratio as applicable to funds allotted under subparagraph (E). None of the funds reallotted by the Administrator pursuant to this paragraph shall be allotted to a State unless the State has met the requirements of subsection (f) of section 1442 (relating to operator certification).

"(2) USE OF FUNDS.—Except as otherwise authorized by this title, amounts deposited in such revolving funds, including loan repayments and interest earned on such amounts, shall be used only for providing loans, loan guarantees, or as a source of reserve and security for leveraged loans, the proceeds of which are deposited in a State revolving fund established under paragraph (1), or other financial assistance authorized under this section to community water systems and nonprofit noncommunity water systems, other than systems owned by Federal agencies. Such financial assistance may be used by a public water system only for expenditures (not including monitoring, operation, and maintenance expenditures) of a type or category which the Administrator has determined, through guidance, will facilitate compliance with national primary drinking water regulations applicable to such system under section 1412 or otherwise significantly further the health protection objectives of this title. Such funds may also be used to provide loans to a system referred to in section 1401(4)(B) for the purpose of providing the treatment described in section 1401(4)(B)(i)(III). Such funds shall not be used for the acquisition of real property or interests therein, unless such acquisition is integral to a project authorized by this paragraph and the purchase is from a willing seller. Of the amount credited to any revolving fund established under this section in any fiscal year, 15 percent shall be available solely for providing loan assistance to public water systems which regularly serve fewer than 10,000 persons.

"(3) LIMITATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), no assistance under this part shall be provided to a public water system that—

"(i) does not have the technical, managerial, and financial capability to ensure compliance with the requirements of this title; or

"(ii) is in significant noncompliance with any requirement of a national primary drinking water regulation or variance.

"(B) RESTRUCTURING.—A public water system described in subparagraph (A) may receive assistance under this part if—

"(i) the owner or operator of the system agrees to undertake feasible and appropriate changes in operations (including ownership, management, accounting, rates, maintenance, consolidation, alternative water supply, or other procedures) if the State determines that such measures are necessary to ensure that the system has the technical, managerial, and financial capability to comply with the requirements of this title over the long term; and

"(ii) the use of the assistance will ensure compliance.

"(b) INTENDED USE PLANS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—After providing for public review and comment, each State that has entered into a capitalization agreement pursuant to this part shall annually prepare a plan that identifies the intended uses of the amounts available to the State loan fund of the State.

"(2) CONTENTS.—An intended use plan shall include—

"(A) a list of the projects to be assisted in the first fiscal year that begins after the date of the plan, including a description of the project, the expected terms of financial assistance, and the size of the community served;

"(B) the criteria and methods established for the distribution of funds; and

"(C) a description of the financial status of the State loan fund and the short-term and long-term goals of the State loan fund.

"(3) USE OF FUNDS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—An intended use plan shall provide, to the maximum extent practicable, that priority for the use of funds be given to projects that—

"(i) address the most serious risk to human health;

"(ii) are necessary to ensure compliance with the requirements of this title (including requirements for filtration); and

"(iii) assist systems most in need on a per household basis according to State affordability criteria.

"(B) LIST OF PROJECTS.—Each State shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, publish and periodically update a list of projects in the State that are eligible for assistance under this part, including the priority assigned to each project and, to the extent known, the expected funding schedule for each project.

"(c) FUND MANAGEMENT.—Each State revolving fund under this section shall be established, maintained, and credited with repayments and interest. The fund corpus shall be available in perpetuity for providing financial assistance under this section. To the extent amounts in each such fund are not required for current obligation or expenditure, such amounts shall be invested in interest bearing obligations.

"(d) ASSISTANCE FOR DISADVANTAGED COMMUNITIES.—

"(1) LOAN SUBSIDY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, in any case in which the State makes a loan pursuant to subsection (a)(2) to a disadvantaged community or to a community that the State expects to become a disadvantaged community as the result of a proposed project, the State may provide additional subsidization (including forgiveness of principal).

"(2) TOTAL AMOUNT OF SUBSIDIES.—For each fiscal year, the total amount of loan subsidies made by a State pursuant to paragraph (1) may not exceed 30 percent of the amount of the capitalization grant received by the State for the year.

"(3) DEFINITION OF DISADVANTAGED COMMUNITY.—In this subsection, the term 'disadvantaged community' means the service area of a public water system that meets affordability criteria established after public review and comment by the State in which the public water system is located. The Administrator may publish information to assist States in establishing affordability criteria.

"(e) STATE CONTRIBUTION.—Each agreement under subsection (a) shall require that the State deposit in the State revolving fund from State moneys an amount equal to at least 20 percent of the total amount of the grant to be made to the State on or before the date on which the grant payment is made to the State, except that a State shall not be required to deposit such amount into the fund prior to the date on which each grant payment is made for fiscal years 1994, 1995, 1996, and 1997 if such State deposits the State contribution amount into the State fund prior to September 30, 1998.

"(f) COMBINED FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION.—Notwithstanding subsection (c), a State may (as a convenience and to avoid unnecessary administrative costs) combine, in accordance with State law, the financial administration of a revolving fund established under this section with the financial administration of any other revolving fund established by the State if otherwise not prohibited by the law under which such revolving fund was established and if the Administrator determines that—

"(1) the grants under this section, together with loan repayments and interest, will be separately accounted for and used solely for the purposes specified in this section; and

"(2) the authority to establish assistance priorities and carry out oversight and related activities (other than financial administration) with respect to such assistance remains with the State agency having primary responsibility for administration of the State program under section 1413.

"(g) ADMINISTRATION.—(1) Each State may annually use up to 4 percent of the funds allotted to the State under this section to cover the reasonable costs of administration of the programs under this section, including the recovery of reasonable costs expended to establish such a fund which are incurred after the date of enactment of this section, and to provide technical assistance to public water systems within the State. For fiscal year 1995 and each fiscal year thereafter, each State with primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems within that State may use up to an additional 10 percent of the funds allotted to the State under this section—

"(A) for public water system supervision programs which receive grants under section 1443(a);

"(B) to administer or provide technical assistance through source water protection programs;

"(C) to develop and implement a capacity development strategy under section 1419(c); and

"(D) for an operator certification program for purposes of meeting the requirements of section 1442(f), if the State matches such expenditures with at least an equal amount of State funds. At least half of such match must be additional to the amount expended by the State for public water supervision in fiscal year 1993. An additional 1 percent of the funds annually allotted to the State under this section shall be used by each State to provide technical assistance to public water systems in such State. Funds utilized under section 1452(g)(1)(B) shall not be used for enforcement actions or for purposes which do not facilitate compliance with national primary drinking water regulations or otherwise significantly further the health protection objectives of this title.

"(2) The Administrator shall publish such guidance and promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, including—

"(A) provisions to ensure that each State commits and expends funds allotted to the State under this section as efficiently as possible in accordance with this title and applicable State laws,

"(B) guidance to prevent waste, fraud, and abuse, and

"(C) guidance to avoid the use of funds made available under this section to finance the expansion of any public water system in anticipation of future population growth.

Such guidance and regulations shall also insure that the States, and public water systems receiving assistance under this section, use accounting, audit, and fiscal procedures that conform to generally accepted accounting standards.

"(3) Each State administering a revolving fund and assistance program under this subsection shall publish and submit to the Administrator a report every 2 years on its activities under this subsection, including the findings of the most recent audit of the fund and the entire State allotment. The Administrator shall periodically audit all revolving funds established by, and all other amounts allotted to, the States pursuant to this subsection in accordance with procedures established by the Comptroller General.

"(h) NEEDS SURVEY.—The Administrator shall conduct an assessment of water system capital improvements needs of all eligible public water systems in the United States and submit a report to the Congress containing the results of such assessment within 180 days after the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996 and every 4 years thereafter.

"(i) INDIAN TRIBES.—1½ percent of the amounts appropriated annually to carry out this section may be used by the Administrator to make grants to Indian Tribes and Alaskan Native Villages which are not otherwise eligible to receive either grants from the Administrator under this section or assistance from State revolving funds established under this section. Such grants may only be used for expenditures by such tribes and villages for public water system expenditures referred to in subsection (a)(2).

"(j) OTHER AREAS.—Of the funds annually available under this section for grants to States, the Administrator shall make allotments in accordance with section 1443(a)(4) for the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American Samoa, Guam, and the Republic of Palau. The grants allotted as provided in this subsection may be provided by the Administrator to the governments of such areas, to public water systems in such areas, or to both, to be used for the public water system expenditures referred to in subsection (a)(2). Such grants shall not be deposited in revolving funds. The total allotment of grants under this section for all areas described in this paragraph in any fiscal year shall not exceed 1 percent of the aggregate amount made available to carry out this section in that fiscal year.

"(k) SET-ASIDES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsection (a)(2), a State may take each of the following actions:

"(A) Provide assistance, only in the form of a loan to one or both of the following:

"(i) Any public water system described in subsection (a)(2) to acquire land or a conservation easement from a willing seller or grantor, if the purpose of the acquisition is to protect the source water of the system from contamination and to ensure compliance with national primary drinking water regulations.

"(ii) Any community water system to implement local, voluntary source water protection measures to protect source water in areas delineated pursuant to section 1428(l), in order to facilitate compliance with national primary drinking water regulations applicable to such system under section 1412 or otherwise significantly further the health protection objectives of this title. Funds authorized under this clause may be used to fund only voluntary, incentive-based mechanisms.

"(B) Provide assistance, including technical and financial assistance, to any public water system as part of a capacity development strategy developed and implemented in accordance with section 1419(c).

"(C) Make expenditures from the capitalization grant of the State for fiscal years 1996 and 1997 to delineate and assess source water protection areas in accordance with section 1428(l), except that funds set aside for such expenditure shall be obligated within 4 fiscal years.

"(D) Make expenditures from the fund for the establishment and implementation of wellhead protection programs under section 1428.

"(2) LIMITATION.—For each fiscal year, the total amount of assistance provided and expenditures made by a State under this subsection may not exceed 15 percent of the amount of the capitalization grant received by the State for that year and may not exceed 10 percent of that amount for any one of the following activities:

"(A) To acquire land or conservation easements pursuant to paragraph (1)(A)(i).

"(B) To provide funding to implement voluntary, incentive-based source water quality protection measures pursuant to paragraph (1)(A)(ii).

"(C) To provide assistance through a capacity development strategy pursuant to paragraph (1)(B).

"(D) To make expenditures to delineate or assess source water protection areas pursuant to paragraph (1)(C).

"(E) To make expenditures to establish and implement wellhead protection programs pursuant to paragraph (1)(D).

"(3) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section creates or conveys any new authority to a State, political subdivision of a State, or community water system for any new regulatory measure, or limits any authority of a State, political subdivision of a State or community water system.

"(l) SAVINGS.—The failure or inability of any public water system to receive funds under this section or any other loan or grant program, or any delay in obtaining the funds, shall not alter the obligation of the system to comply in a timely manner with all applicable drinking water standards and requirements of this title.

"(m) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purposes of this section $599,000,000 for the fiscal year 1994 and $1,000,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1995 through 2003. Sums shall remain available until expended.

"(n) HEALTH EFFECTS STUDIES.—From funds appropriated pursuant to this section for each fiscal year, the Administrator shall reserve $10,000,000 for health effects studies on drinking water contaminants authorized by the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996. In allocating funds made available under this subsection, the Administrator shall give priority to studies concerning the health effects of cryptosporidium, disinfection byproducts, and arsenic, and the implementation of a plan for studies of subpopulations at greater risk of adverse effects.

"(o) DEMONSTRATION PROJECT FOR STATE OF VIRGINIA.—Notwithstanding the other provisions of this subsection limiting the use of funds deposited in a State revolving fund from any State allotment, the State of Virginia may, as a single demonstration and with the approval of the Virginia General Assembly and the Administrator, conduct a program to demonstrate alternative approaches to intergovernmental coordination to assist in the financing of new drinking water facilities in the following rural communities in southwestern Virginia where none exists on the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996 and where such communities are experiencing economic hardship: Lee County, Wise County, Scott County, Dickenson County, Russell County, Buchanan County, Tazewell County, and the city of Norton, Virginia. The funds allotted to that State and deposited in the State revolving fund may be loaned to a regional endowment fund for the purpose set forth in this paragraph under a plan to be approved by the Administrator. The plan may include an advisory group that includes representatives of such counties.

"(p) SMALL SYSTEM TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Administrator may reserve up to 2 percent of the total funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (m) for each of the fiscal years 1997 through 2003 to carry out the provisions of section 1442(e), relating to technical assistance for small systems.".

(2) understand the effects of contaminants and the biomedical mechanisms by which the contaminants cause adverse effects (especially noncancer and infectious effects) and the variations in the effects among humans, especially subpopulations at greater risk of adverse effects, and between test animals and humans; and

(3) develop new approaches to the study of complex mixtures, such as mixtures found in drinking water, especially to determine the prospects for synergistic or antagonistic interactions that may affect the shape of the dose-response relationship of the individual chemicals and microbes, and to examine noncancer endpoints and infectious diseases, and susceptible individuals and subpopulations.

(c) Studies on Harmful Substances in Drinking Water.—

(1) Development of studies.—The Administrator shall, after consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Secretary of Agriculture, and, as appropriate, the heads of other Federal agencies, conduct the studies described in paragraph (2) to support the development and implementation of the most current version of each of the following:

Section 410 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 349) is amended as follows:

(1) By striking "Whenever" and inserting "(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), whenever".

(2) By adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) Not later than 180 days before the effective date of a national primary drinking water regulation promulgated by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency for a contaminant under section 1412 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300g–1), the Secretary shall promulgate a standard of quality regulation under this subsection for that contaminant in bottled water or make a finding that such a regulation is not necessary to protect the public health because the contaminant is contained in water in public water systems (as defined under section 1401(4) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 300f(4))) but not in water used for bottled drinking water. The effective date for any such standard of quality regulation shall be the same as the effective date for such national primary drinking water regulation, except for any standard of quality of regulation promulgated by the Secretary before the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996 for which (as of such date of enactment) an effective date had not been established. In the case of a standard of quality regulation to which such exception applies, the Secretary shall promulgate monitoring requirements for the contaminants covered by the regulation not later than 2 years after such date of enactment. Such monitoring requirements shall become effective not later than 180 days after the date on which the monitoring requirements are promulgated.

"(2) A regulation issued by the Secretary as provided in this subsection shall include any monitoring requirements that the Secretary determines appropriate for bottled water.

"(3) A regulation issued by the Secretary as provided in this subsection shall require the following:

"(A) In the case of contaminants for which a maximum contaminant level is established in a national primary drinking water regulation under section 1412 of the Public Health Service Act, the regulation under this subsection shall establish a maximum contaminant level for the contaminant in bottled water which is no less stringent than the maximum contaminant level provided in the national primary drinking water regulation.

"(B) In the case of contaminants for which a treatment technique is established in a national primary drinking water regulation under section 1412 of the Public Health Service Act, the regulation under this subsection shall require that bottled water be subject to requirements no less protective of the public health than those applicable to water provided by public water systems using the treatment technique required by the national primary drinking water regulation.

"(4)(A) If the Secretary does not promulgate a regulation under this subsection within the period described in paragraph (1), the national primary drinking water regulation referred to in paragraph (1) shall be considered, as of the date on which the Secretary is required to establish a regulation under paragraph (1), as the regulation applicable under this subsection to bottled water.

"(B) In the case of a national primary drinking water regulation that pursuant to subparagraph (A) is considered to be a standard of quality regulation, the Secretary shall, not later than the applicable date referred to in such subparagraph, publish in the Federal Register a notice—

"(i) specifying the contents of such regulation, including monitoring requirements, and

"(ii) providing that for purposes of this paragraph the effective date for such regulation is the same as the effective date for the regulation for purposes of title XIV of the Public Health Service Act (or, if the exception under paragraph (1) applies to the regulation, that the effective date for the regulation is not later than 2 years and 180 days after the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996).".

Mr. ROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate disagree with the amendment of the House and agree to the request for a conference, and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. FRIST) appointed Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. KEMPTHORNE, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. REID, and Mr. LAUTENBERG conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the Senate immediately proceed to the consideration of the following Executive Calendar nominations, No. 513, James Jones; No. 576, Donald Molloy.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed, en bloc, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, en bloc, and the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action; that any statements relating to any of the nominations appear at the appropriate place in the RECORD, and the Senate then immediately return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations were considered and confirmed, en bloc, as follows:

THE JUDICIARY

James P. Jones, of Virginia, to be U.S. District Judge for the Western District of Virginia.

NOMINATION OF JAMES P. JONES

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, one characteristic shared by most top-notch judges is patience. It is an attribute which James P. Jones, the President's nominee to be United States District Judge for the Western District of Virginia, has in abundance. This is fortunate, because he has waited a very long time for this day. Jim was first nominated to be a Federal district judge over 16 years ago, but his nomination became entangled in presidential politics and never came to the Senate floor for consideration. That was 1980. He was recommended for this position again last summer, renominated last December, favorably reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee in March, and has been pending on the Executive Calendar ever since. I know he's relieved to have finally completed this torturous journey, and I'm pleased that he will finally be able to demonstrate what those of us acquainted with him have known for years—that he will make an exemplary judge.

I have known Jim Jones for over 20 years. His experience will help him discharge the responsibilities which will be placed upon him. He's been a litigator in private practice for almost 28 years. He has served as a state senator, assistant attorney general for the Commonwealth, and law clerk in the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

In addition to his keen intellect and superior legal skills, Jim has the character and even disposition crucial for a successful jurist. Not only is Jim well-suited for the position, he has dedicated much of his life outside his legal practice to public service. He has been involved in many community and bar-related activities, and he has recently served as president of the Virginia Board of Education.

I was pleased to be given the opportunity to recommend Jim Jones to the President for this nomination, and I am confident that Jim will serve with distinction as a Federal district court judge in the western district of Virginia. I'm glad he will finally have a chance to serve.

With that Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for supporting this nomination and I yield the floor.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

ORDERS FOR FRIDAY, JULY 19, 1996

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in adjournment until the hour of 9 a.m. on Friday, July 19; further, that immediately following the prayer the Journal of proceedings be deemed approved to date, the morning hour be deemed to have expired, and the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day; and that the Senate immediately resume consideration of the reconciliation bill under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROTH. For the information of all Senators, tomorrow morning there will be a series of rollcall votes beginning at 9 o'clock a.m. on or in relation to amendments to the reconciliation bill, and following that series of votes the Senate will continue to debate amendments to the bill.

However, no further votes will occur during Friday's session of the Senate or during Monday's session of the Senate. Any votes ordered on those amendments will occur at 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday.

Also, it is the majority leader's intention to turn to the agricultural appropriations bill at 2 p.m. on Monday. Again, Senators intending to offer amendments or raise points of order with respect to the reconciliation bill must do so either tomorrow or Monday.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ROTH. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 11:30 p.m., adjourned until Friday, July 19, 1996, at 9 a.m.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 18, 1996:

THE JUDICIARY

JAMES P. JONES, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

DONALD W. MOLLOY, OF MONTANA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF MONTANA.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

CHILD CARE CONSOLIDATION AND INVESTMENT ACT OF 1996

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce the Child Care Consolidation and Investment Act of 1996. I am pleased that my colleague, Senator DODD, has introduced the companion to this bill in the Senate.

The Child Care Consolidation and Investment Act of 1996 consolidates all the major child care programs, including the Child Care and Development Block Grant, into a seamless system of child care for working parents. It invests in child care by increasing funding for the Child Care and Development Block Grant. Funds are increased to $2.8 for fiscal year 1997, and each year thereafter. By fiscal year 2001, my bill provides $4.7 billion for child care.

My bill creates a seamless web of support for families, all the way from welfare to work. Everyone is talking about welfare reform these days, and they should be. The current welfare system is broken. It's not working for the taxpayers and it's not working for the recipients. As cochair of the Democratic Congressional Task Force on Welfare Reform, I helped produce a proposal that reforms our ineffective welfare system by investing in education, training, and support services, including child care, to get families off welfare permanently.

Now, the House of Representatives has passed a bill that purports to move people off of welfare. However, it fails to remove one of the biggest barriers that keep even trained individuals from work: lack of available, safe, affordable child care. The bill that I am introducing today removes that barrier by ensuring that children have a safe place to go while their parents get job training and move into jobs. This bill ensures that single, custodial parents of young children will not be required to undertake education, job training, job search or employment unless appropriate child care is made available.

The Child Care Consolidation and Investment Act of 1996 doesn't stop there. It also directs States to reserve funds to carry out child care activities to support low-income working families, and before and after school care.

There is no question that working families need more child care. But, it is not enough to fund more facilities. Children must have a safe, clean environment that is both stimulating and nurturing if they are going to grow into adults that this country can rely on.

The Child Care Consolidation and Investment Act of 1996 expands access to affordable child care while improving the quality of child care. It does this by providing States with set-aside funds for quality improvements to child care. It also establishes a quality improvement incentive initiative that will make additional funds available to States that show progress in implementing innovative teacher training programs and improved child care quality standards, licensing, and monitoring procedures.

Mr. Speaker, child care has traditionally been a bipartisan issue in the House of Representatives, so I hope that my colleagues from both sides of the aisle will join with me to ensure that no children in this country will be left alone, at home, in a car, or on the streets because their parents are doing their best to support their family. Let's move forward with welfare reform, but let's not leave our kids behind.

PHILMONT FIRE COMPANY CELEBRATES 100 YEARS OF COMMUNITY SERVICE

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, anyone who visits my office cannot help but notice the display of fire helmets that dominates my reception area. They are there for two reasons. First, I had the privilege of being a volunteer fireman in my hometown of Queensbury for more than 20 years, which helps explain the second reason, the tremendous respect that experience gave me for those who provide fire protection in our rural areas.

In a rural area like the 22d District of New York, fire protection is often solely in the hands of these volunteer companies. In New York State alone they save countless lives and billions of dollars worth of property. That is why the efforts of people like those fire fighters in the Philmont Fire Department is so critical.

Mr. Speaker, I have always been partial to the charm and character of small towns and small town people. The town of Philmont in Columbia County is certainly no exception. The traits which make me most fond of such communities is the undeniable camaraderie which exists among neighbors. Looking out for one another and the needs of the community makes places like Philmont great places to live. This concept of community service is exemplified by the devoted service of the members of their volunteer fire department. For 100 years now, this organization has provided critical services for their neighbors on a volunteer basis.

Mr. Speaker, it has become all to seldom that you see fellow citizens put themselves in harms way for the sake of another. While almost all things have changed over the years, thankfully for the residents in Philmont, the members of their fire department have selflessly performed their duty, without remiss, since the formation of this organization one century ago. On Saturday, July 27, 1996, the fire company will be holding a parade to commemorate this milestone. Not only will this offer the residents around Philmont a chance to enjoy themselves at the planned festivities, but it will provide the perfect opportunity for them to extend their gratitude to this organization and its members, both past and present.

Mr. Speaker, I have always been one to judge people by how much they give back to their community. On that scale, the members of the Philmont Fire Company are great Americans. I am truly proud of this organization because it typifies the spirit of voluntarism which has been such a central part of American life. To that end, it is with a sense of pride, Mr. Speaker, that I ask all Members of the House to join me in paying tribute to the Philmont Fire Company on the occasion of their 100th anniversary.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THREE DISTINGUISHED EAGLE SCOUTS

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate three distinguished young men for attaining the rank of Eagle Scout of the Boy Scouts of America [BSA]. Joseph Rybarczyk, Adam Summers, and Anthony Paul Pagorek are all members of the Boy Scout Troop No. 542, sponsored by St. Thomas More Catholic Church Holy Name Society of Munster. They will receive this honor at an Eagle Scout Court of Honor on Sunday, July 21, 1996, at the Munster Community Social Center located in Munster, IN.

An elite group of 2.5 percent of all Boy Scouts attain the Eagle Scout ranking, which is the highest of seven rankings in the Boy Scouts organization. In order to become an Eagle Scout, one must complete the following three tasks; earn 21 merit badges; complete a service project; and demonstrate strong leadership skills within the troop.

According to Stephen Kennedy, Troop Scout Master of BSA Troop No. 542, all three young men are longstanding members of Troop No. 542, as well as outstanding students. Joe, a student at Munster High School and a member of their school band, did an angel tree with the Salvation Army. This project provided Christmas gifts for the Salvation Army to distribute throughout the holiday. Joe was also a senior patrol leader, which is the highest position in the troop. Adam, also a member of Munster High School and their school band, took part in park improvements for the town of Munster. Specifically, he helped to restore several park benches. Anthony, an outstanding student and athlete at Andrean High School, improved landscaping around St. Thomas More Catholic Church. Anthony also attended the National Scout Preserve in Philmont, NM. This preserve is a high adventure camp with a rugged terrain.

The fact that a boy is an Eagle Scout always has carried with it special significance, not only in scouting, but also as he enters higher education, a career, or community service. Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my other distinguished colleagues to join me in congratulating Adam Summers, Anthony Paul Pagorek, and Joseph Rybarczyk for their commendable efforts in society. It takes a great deal of tenacity and devotion to achieve such an illustrious ranking. These three young men have established promising futures, while at the same time improving the quality of life in Indiana's First Congressional District.

CONGRATULATIONS TO ATLANTIC ELECTRIC

HON. FRANK A. LoBIONDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. LoBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Electric, a utility serving residents in the Second District, sponsors an outstanding program to assist teenagers in Cumberland County. For its role in this effort—called the Peer Group Connection program—Atlantic Electric was honored with a Special Distinction Award for Educational Partnerships from the Edison Electric Institute [EEI]. Ms. Fern Mills, manager of community relations for Atlantic Electric, was recently in Washington to receive the award from EEI president Thomas R. Kuhn.

The Peer Group Connection program is a partnership effort between Atlantic Electric, Cumberland Regional High School, and community members of Cumberland County. It seeks to address difficulties in transition between elementary and secondary school through effective use of peer influence. The program seeks to build safe, responsive communities in which ethnic, racial, and cultural differences are respected.

In making the presentation during a Capitol Hill ceremony, Mr. Kuhn said:

> Recognizing that helping teenagers helps society, Atlantic Electric joined other leading Cumberland County, New Jersey businesses in starting the Peer Group Connection, as a support group for high school students coping with the pressures of growing up. Results show higher grades, fewer absences, and a more positive attitude toward school.

To Atlantic Electric and others involved in the educational partnerships, I say congratulations—keep up the good work.

PERUVIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. WILLIAM J. MARTINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. MARTINI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in celebration of the 175th anniversary of Peruvian independence. On July 28, 1821, Don Jose de San Martin led rebel troops in freeing Peru from Spanish rule. The victories of this Peruvian national hero in many ways laid the foundation for independence for all of South America.

I am proud to say that in the Eighth Congressional District of New Jersey, this great day is going to be remembered with all the fanfare it deserves. From July 20 to 28, we will celebrate Peruvian Heritage Days. The days will consist of numerous activities to enhance public awareness of Peruvian history and cultural heritage, and the crowning event will be the parade on Sunday, the 28th. I know from personal experience that it will be both interesting and entertaining.

Mr. Speaker, on this most auspicious occasion, I feel compelled to point out that this day should be a special one not only for Peruvians and Peruvian-Americans, but for freedom-loving people everywhere. Neither the United States nor Peru would be the proud countries we know today if people who came before us had not stood up for their rights, and demanded national sovereignty and independence.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, allow me to add that regardless of whether you favor the melting pot or the mixed salad analogy, the underlying truth of the matter remains: We are a nation of immigrants. As the grandson of immigrants, I have seen firsthand how difficult it can be to assimilate into a new society while still remembering your roots. The community of Peruvian-Americans in my district has succeeded in doing just that. For their immeasurable contributions to the richness of our society, I applaud all of the legal immigrants who collectively make up the fabric of these United States. We are all unique individuals, but we truly are also one Nation under God.

AN ADDITIONAL TOOL FOR TRYING TO REFORM CRIMINAL BEHAVIOR

HON. WILLIAM M. THOMAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, recent communications between the Department of Labor and California show we have another problem to correct in restoring power to the States. Bluntly, the Department is saying California has to pay unemployment benefits to certain criminals being released from prison.

Current Federal law requires employers to pay Federal employment [FUTA] taxes on work performed by their employees. This includes prison inmates who work for private companies through innovative work programs established in several States, including California. Today, some 200 people in California prisons are employed in jobs provided under agreements between the State and private businesses. However, FUTA taxes do not have to be paid for work by prisoners employed in prison operations such as the laundry or cabinet shop.

Since FUTA taxes are paid on behalf of some prisoners, the U.S. Department of Labor ruled that these prisoners must be paid unemployment benefits upon their release from their job—essentially, when they are released from prison. Failure to comply is serious: California employers, for example, would lose tax credits worth $1.7 billion for FUTA taxes they pay on other workers if the California program is disqualified.

Why does Labor take this position? The Federal unemployment insurance program only permits denial of employment benefits in three cases: if the worker's income exceeds certain limits; the claim is fraudulent; or the employee was fired for misconduct. Since prisoners lose their jobs when paroled or released from prison, they do not fit the exceptions.

California voters established the Joint Venture Program in 1990, creating a private work program for prison inmates. Criminals' wages are used to compensate victims, offset incarceration costs, and set-aside funds—20 percent—for the inmate's support upon his or her release from prison. In 1996, California voters overwhelmingly passed an initiative (Proposition 194) that denies unemployment benefits to criminals participating in the Joint Venture Program.

The Department of Labor decision would force California either to pay out unemployment benefits to released prisoners or to eliminate a program that has been successful in helping criminals transition back into the work force. Allowing employees to lose $1.7 billion in credits for taxes they pay on the services of ordinary working people is not an option, needless to say.

Legislation I am introducing today would change the law to treat all prison inmates who participate in work programs the same: Their services would be exempt from the FUTA tax. This would effectively deny unemployment benefits to released prisoners and prohibit the Department of Labor from placing such a ridiculous requirement on the States. The bill's enactment would give States an additional tool to use in trying to reform criminal behavior and I hope my colleagues will agree to its adoption in the near future.

TRIBUTE TO IRVING GEORGE LIEBERFARB

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Mr. Irving George Lieberfarb, a distinguished American from Lake Worth, FL, who recently passed away.

Mr. Lieberfarb was a worthy and admirable individual whose absence is a tragic loss to his family and his community. He was very active in the B'nai B'rith movement, and his synagogue Petach Tikva Congregation, on behalf of many worthy causes. It was Mr. Lieberfarb who brought to my attention the matter of Varian Fry, an American who had saved thousands of Jewish lives during World War II, but had never been honored. In 1939 Mr. Fry had requested the State Department allow him to secure the passage of Jewish refugees suffering under the Nazi regime. The Government responded by reluctantly offering merely 200 visas, and eventually put an end to his work by forcing him to return to America. When he criticized the U.S. immigration policy, upon his return, the Government shunned him and refused to recognize his noble deeds.

I had read Mr. Lieberfarb's article about Varian Fry and was disturbed that the actions of this man were ignored for so long. Therefore, I introduced H.R. 3352, legislation to award the congressional gold medal of honor to Varian Fry's family in honor of his great accomplishments. Mr. Lieberfarb's efforts for this cause alone exhibits his concern for righteousness and justice. It was an honor to have known him.

For this reason, I also wish to insert in the RECORD the kind words submitted by his family to the New York Times, on Friday, June 28, 1996.

> Irving George Lieberfarb, of Lakewood Florida, died on June 26, 1996, Beloved husband of Irene, father of Jay and Richard. Loving grandfather of Suzanne and Julie. THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF DEEP RIVER, CT FIRE DEPARTMENT

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 100th anniversary of the Deep River, CT fire department which serves the community of Deep River with selflessness, energy, and commitment each and every day.

The first organizational meeting of the Deep River fire department was held in March 1896. Since that time, the department has grown to its present size of nearly 40 persons, receives over 200 calls each year, and has at its disposal a fleet of four pumper trucks, one emergency truck, one brush truck, and one fire boat. The Deep River fire department has also expanded to two stations which serve the local community: The fire department headquarters at the center of Deep River and a smaller station in the Winthrop section of town.

The Deep River fire department has served the community faithfully, often demonstrating real ingenuity in its work to keep the community safe. In Deep River, CT, Mr. Speaker, the only fire hydrants are located in town. The department, though, serves not only the town, but many rural areas as well. In those rural areas, using vast amounts of fire hose, the department employs a combination of skill and improvisation to obtain water from nearby streams and ponds, offering rural residents the same level of emergency service as is enjoyed by those who reside in town.

On September 29 of this year, the Deep River fire department will continue the celebration of its 100th anniversary with a community parade. At this parade, the national flag fire truck will make its way to Deep River, a further honor to this most deserving department.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that Members of the House of Representatives join me today in recognizing the accomplishments and achievements of the Deep River fire department on its 100th anniversary, and offering our best wishes for another 100 years of distinguished service and generous sacrifice.

TRIBUTE TO JOYCE EISENBERG-KEEFER AND MEL KEEFER

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Joyce Eisenberg-Keefer and Mel Keefer for their extraordinary charitable activities.

Joyce Eisenberg-Keefer, president and administrator of the Ben B. and Joyce E. Eisenberg Foundation, is a leader in efforts to improve the quality of life of the elderly, youth, and cancer victims.

In 1993, she established the Joyce Eisenberg-Keefer Breast Center at St. John's Hospital and Health Center, a comprehensive center for the study and treatment of breast cancer that sees 10,000 patients each year.

Joyce Eisenberg-Keefer is also a leading contributor to the John Wayne Cancer Institute, Wellness Community, the Weizmann Institute of Science, and the Jewish Homes for the Aging.

Joyce Eisenberg-Keefer's philanthropy does not stop at our national border. She has contributed millions of dollars to Israel Tennis Centers, which allows children develop friendships and learn to work together through play. She built the Eisenberg Kindergarten in Tel Aviv, has denoted mammography equipment to the Shaare Zedek Hospital, and funds a medical fellowship program in cardiothoracic surgery at UCLA for doctors from Hadassah Hospital.

In addition to all of these enormous contributions, Joyce Eisenberg-Keefer actively supports numerous other organizations, including the Anti-Defamation League, United Jewish Fund, Israel Bonds, the Los Angeles Music Center, and the National Diabetes Foundation.

We owe a great debt of gratitude to Joyce Eisenberg-Keefer and Mel Keefer. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting them for their great achievements and in wishing them happiness and success in all future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO THE CENTENNIAL OF ST. ANTHONY'S CHURCH, ELMENDORF, TX

HON. FRANK TEJEDA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. TEJEDA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize a special anniversary for a south Texas parish in the district I represent. St. Anthony's Church, situated in the small town of Elmendorf, TX, this month is celebrating the centennial of their first church building. I ask that you join me in expressing pride and joy in this accomplishment.

The parish of St. Anthony's in Elmendorf dates back at least to 1872. At that time, under the pastoral guidance of Father C. Jaillets, Masses and services were celebrated in area homes. The pastor of a neighboring community, Father Emilio Chapolard, led the effort to build the church in Elmendorf in 1896. Responsible for a large area south of San Antonio, Father Chapolard served 40 years in Graytown.

During the past 100 years, St. Anthony's has been home to three churches. The second building was constructed under the direction of Father Matthias J. Justen from 1917 to 1922. Some 50 years later, the third church was built during 1973 and 1974 under the guidance of Father Severiano Fernandez and was blessed by Bishop Patrick Flores, who now serves the entire region as archbishop. Today, the church hosts a new rectory, parish hall, a ccd center, and a religious education center.

The church has been under the spiritual guidance of priests of many backgrounds. During the early years of this century, the Claretian Fathers from San Antonio were charged with the responsibility of the parish. Thereafter, the Mexican Josephite Brothers took over for a number of years until the 1921 arrival of Father Justen, the first Redemptorist to be in charge of the parish. The Redemptorists served at St. Anthony's for more than 40 years, until 1962. At that time, the archbishop invited the Augustinian Fathers to take charge of the parish. The church enjoyed their guidance until 1993, when the present priest, Father William McNamara arrived.

An archdiocesan priest from Ireland, Father McNamara has given greatly to the church and the community. Under his guidance, St. Anthony's is celebrating a Mass of thanksgiving and a parish Mass to mark the centennial of the first church. We appreciate his efforts, and those of the entire parish, to build not only church buildings, but a church community. The foundation stones set in place 100 years ago have endured the test of time, and in that place we now find a vibrant and committed parish looking forward to the next century for St. Anthony's.

TRIBUTE TO THE NEW BALTIMORE HISTORICAL SOCIETY

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to the New Baltimore Historical Society which will celebrate its 20th anniversary on Saturday, July 20, 1996. How fortunate we are to have people in our home towns who are willing to give their talents to preserve our community treasures.

First established as a sesquicentennial project, the Historical Society is dedicated to preserving the heritage of the Anchor Bay area. It is indeed a wonderful anniversary for this organization as the culmination of their hard work is achieved. Under the guidance of the New Baltimore Historical Society, the Grand Pacific House, a former hotel built in 1881, was renovated. This last vestige of New Baltimore's hotel era is now a community museum.

The New Baltimore Historical Society purchased the Grand Pacific House in 1985 and began restoration of the building. Through countless hours of volunteer work, fundraisers, and generous donations from civic groups, businesses and individuals the dream has come true. The Museum is home to a variety of local historic artifacts and special theme rooms that have captured a glimpse of the past for future generations.

I commend the New Baltimore Historical Society for its efforts and encourage the members to continue with their good work. The formal dedication of the Grand Pacific House Historical Site plaque is a celebration of their labor of love. Please join me in saluting the New Baltimore Historical Society on the event of their 20th anniversary.

TOWER ONE/TOWER EAST'S 25TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, I offer my heartfelt congratulations to Tower One/Tower East on the 25th anniversary of this outstanding multicultural senior housing facility. For a quarter of a century, the New Haven Jewish Federation Housing Corp. has given New Haven area seniors a place to call home in Tower One.

As part of its 25th birthday celebration, Tower One will honor its past presidents at a champagne breakfast. They are: Irving Enson, Jay I. Vlock, Linda Kantor, Alan Schiff, Stanley H. Arffa, Andrew Eder, Joel A. Wasserman, Samuel I. Trotz, Diane Alderman, Tracy Selmon, Henry Stein, Ted Schaffer, and Joseph R. Blumberg. I commend each of them for the work the presidents have done to make Tower One a success.

When we celebrate Tower One's 25th anniversary, we celebrate the values that make families and communities strong—the values that enable Tower One to create a true home for Connecticut's seniors. Not only are residents provided with on-site health services, Kosher meals in the dining room and a wide variety of activities keep those at Tower One community engaged with another and the community. Residents gather for everything from informal sing-alongs and games to live entertainment and organized parties and celebrations. Tower One also provides day trips and outings.

I treasure the yearly opportunity I have to host the holiday party at Tower One because it gives me the chance to share in the holiday celebrations so dear to Tower One's residents. Most important, the seniors at Tower One are able to honor the religious and cultural traditions that keep them close to family and friends. It is truly a place where residents feel at home.

I have been involved with Tower One for many, many years and have watched as the building has been improved and updated to provide residents with the very best services and facilities. I sincerely congratulate all those at Tower One on this proud occasion. I know that Bob Bachman's leadership will enable Tower One to continue its development and growth. I congratulate Tower One on 25 great years and wish it the same success in the future.

GREAT DOMINICAN PARADE AND CARNIVAL OF THE BRONX

HON. JOSÉ E. SERRANO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Great Dominican Parade and Carnival of the Bronx on its sixth year of celebration of the Dominican culture in my south Bronx congressional district.

It gives me great pleasure to once again join the members and friends of the Dominican community who will be marching along the Grand Concourse this Sunday in celebration of Dominican culture and its historic legacy.

This year's parade will honor Juan Pablo Duarte, father of the independence of the Dominican Republic, which was achieved in 1844.

The parade was born in 1990, following the vision of its president and founder Felipe Febles. Mr. Febles saw the need to provide Dominicans with a forum to educate them and to strengthen their sense of identity. In addition, its associated nonprofit institution offers English classes and other services to immigrants.

The Dominican Republic has a long and distinguished history. Christopher Columbus visited in 1492, and named the island Hispaniola. Among other important legacies, Santo Domingo, the nation's capital, is the oldest settlement by Europeans and the location of the most ancient cathedral in the Americas.

Dominicans are proud of their country's history, rich culture, natural resources, agriculture, and other industries. The Great Dominican Parade and Carnival of the Bronx has adopted as its symbol the map of the Dominican Republic containing in its center a portrait of Juan Pablo Duarte, the Dominican flag, and a depiction of the oldest cathedral and the highest mountain in the nation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the members and friends of the Great Dominican Parade and Carnival of the Bronx for their 6 years of bringing joy and of strengthening the community.

TRIBUTE TO LYLE AND MARY MAPLES

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my congratulations to Lyle and Mary Maples of Lenoir City, TN, upon the occasion of their golden wedding anniversary on July 27, 1996. In this day and age where family values are much discussed, I can think of no greater testament to life, love, honor, and family values than the commitment of a 50 year marriage.

Lyle and Mary worked until retirement in Oak Ridge, TN. Lyle worked at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory and Mary worked for the Atomic Energy Commission. Their contributions to the "golden days" of Oak Ridge on projects of immense significance are appreciated by all Americans.

Along the way, they built a home and raised a family. They have three children, Mary Ann, Jim and Bob. Mary Ann is a master educator at Lenoir City High School; Jim is a district manager at Goody's Corp. in Knoxville and Bob is a lobbyist in Washington, DC. Lyle and Mary are equally as proud of their grandchildren; three boys—Clay Stewart, Jesse and Joe Maples and two granddaughters—Mary Lee Stewart and Becca Maples. A family raised in Tennessee and working to better their community, State and Nation.

Lyle and Mary are active members of their community and their church, Central United Methodist. Their good deeds and works are appreciated by civic leaders, friends, and neighbors.

Mr. Speaker, I join Lyle and Mary's family, friends, and the Lenoir City community in recognizing this milestone and wish them many more years of life and love.

WOMEN'S ECONOMIC EQUITY ACT

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, as a cochair of the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues, I am pleased to introduce the Women's Economic Equity Act [EEA]. This package of legislation is designed to increase economic opportunities for American women.

The Economic Equity Act is a comprehensive, forward-looking agenda for improving the economic well-being of American women in the workplace and at home. This legislative package has been introduced by the Women's Caucus in every Congress since 1981.

This year's EEA continues its traditional focus on such issues as pay equity and pension reform, but places new emphasis on the economic impact of domestic violence. The bills included in the EEA would expand professional opportunities for women in science and engineering and expand job benefits for part-time and temporary workers, most of whom are women. One provision would extend IRA deductions to women who choose to stay at home.

Although women are and continue to be the majority of new entrants into the workplace, they continue to be clustered in low-skilled, low-paying jobs. By improving the economic condition of women, we will be helping our Nation face the economic challenges of the 21st century.

Each of the individual provisions included in the EEA have been or will be introduced as separate bills. By bringing each of these 36 bills under a single bill number, the caucus hopes to set out a broad agenda for addressing important women's economic issues.

TRIBUTE TO GIRL SCOUT GOLD AWARD RECIPIENTS

HON. WAYNE ALLARD

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to salute several outstanding young women who have been honored with the Girl Scout Gold Award by Girl Scouts-Mountain Prairie Council in Colorado. They are Christine Myers of Troop 61; Tiffany Beck and Denise Johnson of Troop 320; Molly Phelan of Troop 642; and Stephanie Rabourn. They were honored recently for earning the highest achievement award in U.S. Girl Scouting. The Girl Scout Gold Award symbolizes outstanding accomplishments in the areas of leadership, community service, career planning, and personal development. The award can be earned by girls aged 14–17, or in grades 9–12.

Girl Scouts of the U.S.A., an organization serving over 2.5 million girls, has awarded more than 20,000 Girl Scout Gold Awards to senior Girl Scouts since the inception of the program in 1980. To receive the award, a Girl Scout must earn four interest project patches, the Career Exploration Pin, the Senior Girl Scout Leadership Award, and the Senior Girl Scout Challenge, as well as design and implement a Girl Scout Gold Award project. A plan for fulfilling these requirements is created by the Senior Girl Scout and is carried out through close cooperation between the girl and an adult Girl Scout volunteer.

As members of Girl Scouts-Mountain Prairie Council, these young women began working toward the Girl Scout Gold Award in 1995. Christine completed her project in areas of organizing a book drive, Tiffany and Denise completed their projects in areas of planning and running a day camp, Molly completed her project in areas of drinking and driving, and Stephanie completed her project in areas of setting up a program that helps Hispanic children who are having difficulties with their schoolwork. I believe that these young women should receive public recognition due them for their significant service to the community and the country.

PRESIDENT CLINTON IGNORES VICE PRESIDENT GORE'S OWN LEGISLATION

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I insert for the record a Reuter's report from July 15 in which the U.S. Commander of the Fifth Fleet, Adm. John Scott Redd, has once again reported that Iran has acquired more C–802 antiship missiles from Communist China.

According to Admiral Redd, these missiles add a new dimension in the regional naval threat. Further, he reports that Iran has tripled the number of missiles deployed on its coast and is fitting up to 20 Huodong patrol boats, also acquired from Communist China, with these missiles.

Mr. Speaker, these weapons transfers should be a sanctionable activity under the law. Indeed, they should be sanctionable under a law written by none other than the Vice-President of the United States, ALBERT GORE. In 1992, then-Senator GORE authored the Iran-Iraq Arms Non Proliferation Act, which was successfully amended to the fiscal year 1993 Defense authorization bill.

Section 1605 of the act calls for mandatory sanctions against any foreign country if the President determines that the country transfers goods or technology so as to contribute knowingly and materially to the efforts by Iran or Iraq to acquire destabilizing numbers and types of advanced conventional weapons. The mandatory sanctions include a suspension of U.S. bilateral assistance, a requirement that the United States oppose multilateral loans to that country, a suspension of codevelopment or coproduction agreements, a suspension of military and dual-use technical exchange agreements, and a ban on exports of products on the U.S. munitions list, all for a period of one year. The legislation does contain a Presidential national security waiver, Mr. Speaker, but the outrageous thing is that the President has not even bothered to issue the waiver. He is simply ignoring the law. So apparently, is the author of the law.

Worse, this administration is ignoring the threat. And the threat comes not only from the rogue nation of Iran, but from its rogue supplier, Communist China. The instances of weapons and dangerous technology transfers by this outlaw nation are too numerous to list, and so is the number of times that the Clinton administration has responded with outright capitulation. This will only beget more of the same Mr. Speaker.

The travesty is that one day young American men and women may find themselves in a fight with any number of nations that have been armed and supplied by Communist China, and we will then have to ask ourselves why we didn't try to stop these dangerous transfers sooner.

IRAN TRIPLES GULF DEPLOYED MISSILES—U.S. NAVY

(By Diana Abdallah)

DUBAI, July 15.—Iran has in the past two years tripled the number of missiles deployed on its Gulf coast and is fitting Chinese-built cruise missiles on up to 20 of its naval boats, a senior U.S. navy commander said on Monday.

Vice Admiral John Scott Redd, Commander of the U.S. Fifth Fleet and Commander, U.S. Naval Forces, Central Command, said Iran's acquisition of Chinese-built radar guided C–802 anti-ship missiles was "a new dimension" in the regional naval threat.

He told Reuters from his headquarters in Bahrain that Iraq and Iran continued to pose a threat to security in the region which produces a third of the world's oil supply.

Redd said there were no indications of threats against U.S. naval forces following two bombs that killed 24 Americans in Saudi Arabia in the past year, but that the navy had taken "prudent measures." He did not elaborate.

"Iraq is the major land threat in the region . . . Because it still has the most capable and largest ground force in the region, while Iran is more of a naval threat," said Redd, who ends his assignment on Wednesday to return to Washington.

He said Iran was expected to have up to 20 patrol boats fitted with anti-ship Chinese-built C–802 cruise missiles.

It already has two Russian Kilo submarines "and they have another one coming we think before the year is out," he said.

"There has been a tripling of shore-based missiles both that shoot at ships and those that are surface-to-air missiles," he said. "The number they have deployed on the Gulf coast and in the Strait (of Hormuz) roughly tripled."

"The newest dimension is that they have Chinese-built C–802 missiles against ships . . . The Houdong patrol craft they got from China came fitted to fire the C–802s and they have now received all 10 of them. Some arrived in the last couple of months."

"They are also taking some of the other patrol craft and modifying them to carry the missiles and the work is in progress. We could be looking at 20 or more patrol ships at sea capable of carrying those surface-to-surface missiles," he said.

Officials in the United States, which accuses Iran of sponsoring terrorism and has imposed sanctions on it, have expressed concern since the 1991 Gulf War about what they say is Iran's growing military capability and aims in the region.

Iran has rejected all these charges.

Redd said U.S. forces were capable of dealing with any Iranian military threat.

Navy spokesman Commander T. McCreary said 34 U.S. vessels, including an aircraft carrier group, cruisers, destroyers—some capable of firing TOMAHAWK cruise missiles—frigates and submarines, were currently deployed in Central Command area, most of them in Gulf waters.

Up to 15,000 sailors and marines are stationed in the area.

LEONARD AND RUBY BASSETT CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to rise today to commemorate Leonard and Ruby Bassett on their golden wedding anniversary. The Bassetts' children, Leonard Jr., Dennis, Leatha, and Oddette, are hosting a joyous celebration honoring their parents' 50 years of love, friendship and devotion. This event will be held this Saturday, July 20, 1996, at the Genesis Convention Center in Gary, IN.

While in their early twenties Leonard Bassett and Ruby Holman met in the spring of 1946 at a dance hall located across from Froebel High School in Gary. Mr. Bassett had just returned from 28 months of service in the U.S. Navy and resolved to attend a dance that was being held for young adults. It was there that they first met. The two knew of each other during their years at Roosevelt High School, but they did not formally meet until this magical night at the dance.

After courting for a couple of months, the two discovered that they shared the same dreams of settling down and starting a family. After a short period of dating, Leonard and Ruby knew that they had found true love and that they were destined to be partners in life. Shortly thereafter, Leonard and Ruby were joined in holy matrimony on July 21, 1946.

During the Bassetts' 50 years of marriage they had 4 children: Leonard, Jr., Dennis, Leatha, and Oddette. The Bassetts are thankful that, following graduation from Roosevelt High School, all four of their children were able to continue on to higher education and establish themselves in their respective careers.

In 1983, Leonard retired from U.S. Steel after devoting 37 years of his life to the steel industry. Leonard retired as a production foreman. When Ruby retired, she was head cook of the Gary Community School Corp. Currently, she is a part-time employee with the Lake County government. Ruby is also a precinct committee person and co-captain of the fifth precinct in Gary.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my other colleagues to join me in congratulating the Bassetts as they celebrate 50 years of marriage. In today's world, it is refreshing to see two people who have devoted their lives to creating a successful marriage and happy family. May the Bassetts be a positive role model for today's young couples who are starting families. They are proof that a little dedication and a lot of love can make marriage one of life's most magnificent experiences.

THE CONTINUING STRIKE IN CYPRUS

HON. RODNEY P. FRELINGHUYSEN

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recall the unprovoked Turkish invasion of Cyprus on July 20, 1974, and the strife that still exists on the island as a result of Turkish aggression.

After Cyprus gained independence from Great Britain in 1960, the island, whose population remains nearly 80 percent Greek, experienced clashes between the Greek and Turkish communities. Despite the overwhelmingly Greek population and culture dating back to ancient times, the Turkish government invaded Cyprus during a transition in political rule. Turkish forces invaded the northern coast of the island and soon amassed 30,000 troops that quickly overwhelmed the unexpecting Greek Cypriot population. Although the U.N. Security Council negotiated peace talks, the Turkish forces controlled 37 percent of Cyprus by August, leaving one-third of the Cypriot population homeless and more than 1,600 persons still unaccounted for to this day—including 5 Americans.

Now, 22 years later, Cyprus remains divided despite repeated attempts at peace talks. Greek Cypriots who lived in towns for generations now stare across a barbed-wire fence that divides them from the Turkish controlled section of their homeland where their homes, property, and churches have been destroyed. This 112-mile border that divides the Greek south from the Turkish-controlled north, is as tense as the old Berlin Wall. U.N. troops still patrol this partition that has existed since the Turkish invasion.

Mr. Speaker, after 22 years of cold war, sharp division, unanswered questions, and tension created by Turkish actions since 1974, there must be a resolution and settlement since this situation is tragic for Greek Cypriots and a real danger to greater European peace and security.

Cyprus should be a free and open state and those responsible for the tragedies and crimes of the past and present should be held accountable and brought to justice.

ALASKANS ARE THE BEST STEWARDS OF ALASKA LANDS AND RESOURCES

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring the attention of my colleagues to a guest opinion that appeared in the June issue of Resource Review. It is by Jake Adams, an Inupiat Eskimo who is both a whaling captain and president of the Arctic Slope Regional Corp. He makes the important point that Alaskans are the best stewards of Alaska lands and resources, not the political leaders and activists who live here in Washington, DC. The text of his opinion follows my remarks.

Just as Eskimo self-regulation under the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission has succeeded in protecting both the Bowhead Whale and the communities that depend on the whale for subsistence, I believe that the resources of the Tongass National Forest will be best managed by the State of Alaska, as I propose in H.R. 2413. Time and time again Alaskans have proven their ability to manage their resources responsibly, an accomplishment, as Mr. Adams points out, that Washington, DC, cannot claim.

I hope that my colleagues will read the wise words of Mr. Adams.

[From the Resource Review, June 1996]

ALASKA—A PLACE THAT WORKS

(By Jacob Adams)

Compared to the rest of the nation, Alaskans enjoy a relatively untouched, pristine environment. This fact has led some people who have mismanaged their own environment and communities to view Alaska as a public museum; a place they want to control and preserve, untouched and suspended in time.

This, of course, does not work well for those of us who live in Alaska, have families to support, communities to nurture and shareholders' economic interests to protect and advance. Yet, many Alaskans often find that they are forced to be major actors in contentious national debates over the use of public lands and resources and, in some cases, even their own private lands and resources.

It is a shame that many political leaders and activists who live and work in the middle of the poverty, crime and hopelessness of Washington, D.C.,—a city that does not work—are determined to second-guess so much of what we Alaskans do and aspire for.

Alaska, after all, is a place that works. We educate our children. We meet our people's needs. We protect our fish and wildlife. We believe in the work ethic. And we take care of our poor and disadvantaged.

Profit is not a dirty word in Alaska. Free enterprise works here. It is part of a proud American tradition that produces income, jobs and tax revenue. It improves the quality of people's lives. But, it can also be a hard task master.

Those of us who live on the North Slope have seen some successes and a fair share of failures. One success story that continues today is the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission (AEWC). In the late 1970s, the International Whaling Commission, elements of the federal government and animal rights activists pushed hard to terminate my people's traditional subsistence hunts for the Bowhead Whale. We fought those efforts. We proposed a system of Eskimo "self-regulation" through AEWC. Who better to protect the species and regulate the hunt than the people whose subsistence and culture is at stake?

We were successful. Today, the whales, our people and our culture are thriving. And we did it by ourselves. Self-regulation by the parties who stand to lose or gain is a concept which should be used more by the state and federal governments.

But, we have also seen some failures. ASRC and its shareholders—working with the State, RDC, Arctic Power and our Congressional Delegation, have tried very hard since 1987 to open the small, oil rich Coastal Plain area of ANWR to oil and gas leasing. We own 92,160 acres of Coastal Plain land in the huge 19 million acre Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. But we are denied the benefits of our resources. We are prohibited by federal law from producing and using oil or natural gas on our privately-owned lands in ANWR at the village of Kaktovik. Instead, the federal government's action means that we must import fuel oil to heat village homes and generate electricity. Yet, Kaktovik sits on the nation's best prospect for major new oil and gas reserves.

We have been fighting this issue for nine years. We may have to fight for nine or ten more. Lifting the Alaska oil export ban took 22 years.

We will continue to push to open the Coastal Plain because it is the right thing to do. Alaskans are the best stewards of our land, our environment and our fish and wildlife resources. We should be major participants in discussions about our future. We do not need the failed landlords of Washington to dictate their policies of failure to us and our children.

My people have seen ups and we have seen downs. But we do not dwell on short-term reverses or disappointments. In the long run, rational thought and the laws of economics will prevail. The fundamental changes taking place in Russia, our neighbors to the west, were not conceivable ten years ago.

Alaskans need to have staying power. We are in this for the long run. Jacob Adams is the President of the Arctic Slope Regional Corporation, a member of the North Slope Borough Assembly and a whaling captain in Barrow. Jake also serves on the Board of Directors for RDC.

NEW PAYMENT SYSTEM FOR PPS EXEMPT REHABILITATION HOSPITALS AND UNITS

HON. FRANK A. LoBIONDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. LoBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I introduce legislation to provide for a Medicare prospective payment system [PPS] for inpatient rehabilitation hospital and rehabilitation unit services.

Prior to 1983, the Medicare Act paid hospitals the reasonable cost of treating Medicare patients. Generally, this meant that the more a hospital spent, the more it was paid from the Medicare Trust Fund. The result was a rapid rate of increase in Medicare spending for hospitalization. In 1983, this system was replaced with a Prospective Payment System under which hospitals were paid fixed rates for various types of diagnostic groups, commonly known as DRG's. Certain providers of care were exempted from this system because a way to appropriately group their patients did not exist. Among these were rehabilitation hospitals and rehabilitation units in general hospitals. These continued to be reimbursed based on costs incurred, but subject to limits on payment per discharge. These limits are imposed under the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, and commonly known as TEFRA limits.

TEFRA limits were to be a short-term expedient to reduce the rate of increase in hospital payments. TEFRA limits are based on Medicare operating cost of a hospital or unit in an assigned base year divided by the number of Medicare discharges in that year. This value is updated annually by an update factor, which is intended to reflect inflation. A hospital's or unit's ceiling on Medicare reimbursement is the TEFRA limit for a given year times the number of its Medicare discharges in that period, the TEFRA ceiling.

For cost reporting periods beginning on and after October 11, 1991 the Medicare Program reimburses a portion of a provider's cost over its TEFRA ceiling in an amount which is the lower of 50 percent of cost over the ceiling or 10 percent of the ceiling. Provision for such payment was made by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 [OBRA 90]. If a provider's costs are less than its TEFRA ceiling, the provider is paid an incentive payment equal to the lower of 50 percent of the difference between its Medicare operating costs and its TEFRA ceiling or 5 percent of that ceiling.

When this system was adopted, it was assumed that it would be in place only a short time and then be replaced with a PPS for excluded hospitals and units. New hospitals and units coming on line after the TEFRA system was in place were in a much better position than older facilities, simply because their more current base years included more contemporary wage rates and other operating costs.

This now very old temporary system is flawed for the following reasons:

Medicare pays widely varying amounts for similar services, producing serious inequities among competing institutions.

New hospitals and units can establish limits based on contemporary wage levels and otherwise achieve much higher limits than older hospitals, putting them at a great advantage.

By treating all rehabilitation discharges as having the same financial value, the TEFRA system provides a strong incentive to admit and treat short-stay, less complex cases and to avoid long-stay, more disabled beneficiaries. This is not a good policy for Medicare to continue to support.

Because any change in services that will increase average length of stay or intensity of services will likely result in cost over a TEFRA limit, the system inhibits the development of new programs. This is also not a good direction and does not encourage implementation of current practices.

The process for administrative adjustment of limits does not provide a remedy because it is not timely. HCFA does not decide cases within the 180-day period required by law and does not recognize many legitimate costs.

The very strong incentive to develop new rehabilitation hospitals and units has resulted in an increase in the number of rehabilitation hospitals and units. PROPAC reports that in 1985 there were 545 such hospitals and units. In 1995 there were 1,019. Between 1990 and 1994 Medicare payments to such facilities increased from $1.9 to $3.7 billion. Some of this increase reflects the lack of needed service capacity in 1983. At the same time, many older facilities had and have to live with very low limits of Medicare reimbursement and were paid less than the cost of operation, while new facilities were being paid much higher cost reimbursement and bonuses as well. It is hard to imagine a worse system.

The clear solution to this situation is to introduce a prospective payment system for rehabilitation facilities under which providers are paid similar amounts for similar services and payments are scaled to the duration and intensity of services required by patients. Such a system has been devised by a research team at the University of Pennsylvania. It is based on the functional abilities of patients receiving rehabilitation services.

It is now being used by the RAND Corp., under contract with the Health Care Financing Administration, to design a payment system. This work is to be completed before the end of 1996.

My bill would require that a PPS for rehabilitation be implemented by the Secretary of HHS for Medicare cost reporting years beginning on and after October 1, 1997. This date would allow adequate time to adopt regulations and administrative procedures. And my bill requires that this payment system is budget neutral.

Enactment of this bill would have multiple benefits. It would benefit patients by removing the implied financial penalty for treating severely disabled patients; it would benefit providers of services by putting all rehabilitation facilities on a level playing field; and it would benefit the Medicare trust fund by eliminating the enormous incentive in present law to duplicate service capacity.

I look forward to support from my colleagues in passing this important legislation.

20TH ANNIVERSARY OF CHERRY VERSUS MATHEWS

HON. SANFORD D. BISHOP, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, July 19 is the 20th anniversary of the U.S. District Court decision known as Cherry versus Mathews, the historic ruling that opened the door to full and equal citizenship for disabled citizens.

The plaintiff, Dr. James L. Cherry, is a Georgian. His landmark suit led to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's regulation under section 504 of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act assuring disabled citizens reasonable access to public programs and facilities. This regulation became the model for the Americans with Disability Act, which expanded protection from discrimination to all persons with disabilities. It was also Dr. Cherry who first proposed Georgia's voting accessibility law, on which a similar Federal statute is patterned.

Twenty years ago, many disabled citizens could not use public transportation; or go to most schools and colleges; or have access to many Government parks and buildings and other services; or even have access to voting booths.

This changed following the decision by Judge John Lewis Smith. It changed almost overnight. Suddenly, the country's promise of equal opportunity became a reality for millions of disabled Americans. It was one of the great moments in America's march toward justice and opportunity for all.

As we observe the 20th anniversary of Cherry versus Mathews, I urge all Americans to rededicate themselves to the principle of equality of opportunity which is one of the cornerstones of the country's greatness.

CYPRUS DISPUTE

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in recognizing and marking the 22d anniversary of the Turkish invasion of northern Cyprus.

Since 1974 when one-third of the island of Cyprus was invaded by Turkish troops, the United States and other interested parties around the world have worked tirelessly to try to bring a just and lasting solution to a problem that has threatened the peace and stability of that country and that region. Unfortunately, little progress has occurred.

Mr. Speaker, substantial progress toward a settlement of Cyprus dispute is long overdue. Progress on Cyprus should be a high priority at all levels of our government. Many in the Congress have been committed to reaching a solution over the years, and I commend the efforts on the part of my colleagues.

My colleagues and I have urged the administration to launch a full-scale initiative to move the Cyprus negotiations forward. It is only through high-level and sustained United States attention that the parties on the island will take the steps necessary to resolve this issue.

Mr. Speaker, Turkey remains the key to a solution of the Cyprus problem. While many of us have been frustrated by the lack of progress on the issue, we have reasons today to be hopeful and to encourage all parties to maintain their commitment. The United States, as well as the United Nations, and members of the European Union, all have stepped up efforts to bring the parties together.

I am encouraged by this activity, as well as by the bipartisan support of this Congress for an intensified American effort. It is in the United States national interest as well as that of all parties in the region that we find a just and viable solution for Cyprus.

We should dedicate ourselves to that goal and seek to make 1996 the year we achieved substantial progress toward a settlement of the Cyprus dispute.

EUROPEAN UNION SANCTIONS

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, the European Union is considering imposing visa requirements for American travelers and even freezing some United States assets in retaliation for our efforts to bring justice to the victims of Fidel Castro's totalitarian regime in Cuba.

Well, while they are at it, why don't they just impose visa requirements on our NATO soldiers stationed across Europe. And our soldiers deployed in Bosnia, too.

Mr. Speaker, if that's the game the Europeans want to play, we'll be glad to bring our troops home and let the Europeans foot the cost of keeping peace on their continent.

Mr. Speaker, the Europeans should know that many Americans are fed up with having to clean up other people's messes in places like Bosnia, and paying for it in American lives and billions of dollars.

Now I take a back seat to no one in desiring to maintain strong relations with our European allies, Mr. Speaker. But enough is enough. If the Europeans want to continue to prop up Fidel Castro and then turn around and thumb their noses at us, they had better know that they can expect a reaction from the American people.

DIOCESE OF GAYLORD SILVER ANNIVERSARY

HON. BART STUPAK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention to this House and the entire Nation the 25th anniversary of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Gaylord, MI. His Holiness, Pope Paul VI, established the Gaylord Diocese on July 20, 1971. On July 21, 1996 a special liturgical celebration will be held at the Cathedral of St. Mary Our Lady of Mount Carmel to commemorate the establishment of this diocese.

The Diocese of Gaylord was created from the separation of territories originally part of the Saginaw and Grand Rapids Dioceses. The new diocese covered 21 of the most beautiful counties in northern Michigan. In 1971 the diocese had a total population of 288,556 and a Roman Catholic population of 66,000. At the age of 43, Edmund Szoka from the Diocese of Marquette became the youngest bishop in the Nation. With 83 parishes under his charge, Bishop Szoka embraced the motto "To Live in Faith." Through many hours of hard work and cooperation with the residing priests and congregations Bishop Szoka was able to bring the separate parishes together in love, prayer and community. Bishop Szoka stayed with the Diocese of Gaylord for 10 years. In 1981 he left the area for new assignments. When asked about the silver anniversary, Edmund Szoka, now a cardinal, said that even though he left 15 years ago "a great part of [his] heart remains and always will remain in the Diocese of Gaylord."

When Cardinal Szoka left the Diocese he was replaced by Bishop Robert Rose. Bishop Rose served the diocese for 8 years before moving south to the Grand Rapids' Diocese. The current bishop, Patrick Cooney, was installed in the Diocese of Gaylord as the third bishop on January 28, 1990. The oldest child of a very religious family, Bishop Cooney has spent his life learning the way of and serving the Lord. Bishop Cooney attended the Sacred Heart Seminary College of Detroit and the Gregorian University in Rome, studying philosophy and theology. After returning to Detroit from Rome Bishop Cooney decided to pursue his love for liturgy and entered the University of Notre Dame to pursue a graduate degree in liturgical research.

Under Bishop Cooney's care, the diocese has grown stronger through the hard work and dedication of the priests, nuns, secretariats, and most importantly, the lay members. We see the formation of the first Diocesan Pastoral Council in 1993 as an example of this dedication. Made up of clergy, religious, lay men and women from all over the Diocese, the council meets with the Bishop several times a year to discuss issues affecting the Church. Today the Diocese of Gaylord has grown to include 87,000 Roman Catholics, 75 priests, and 82 parishes. On October 5, 1996, the Fifth Annual Diocesan Conference will be held with the theme "Remember and Remembering" to discuss ways to strengthen the church by involving members who have slipped away and by introducing the church to new members. Following the conference there will be a youth rally. The goal of the rally, at which 350 teens are expected, is to strengthen the membership of a younger generation to keep the church strong in the future.

On July 21, 1996, the Diocesan Liturgical Celebration will be held at St. Mary Cathedral in Gaylord. Among those attending will be Cardinal Szoka and Bishop Rose, the Apostolic Pro-Nuncio to the United States, Agostino Cacciavillan, Cardinal Adam Maida of the Archdiocese of Detroit, a number of bishops and priests from Michigan and Ohio and nearly 2,000 members from the 82 parishes invited.

Mr. Speaker, the last 25 years have been a time for growth and discovery for the Diocese of Gaylord. The clergy and congregations of the 82 parishes in northern Michigan have come together to make this new diocese a place of prayer, hope, and faith. The diocese has come to be a community in which love and fellowship is witnessed on a daily basis. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Catholic community and the entire Nation, I would like to congratulate the Diocese of Gaylord on 25 glorious years.

A TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM STATES LEE

HON. SUE MYRICK

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an old friend and outstanding hero of North Carolina who passed away last week. William "Bill" States Lee was a model citizen who continually gave of himself for his country, community, friends, and family.

Bill Lee was the former chairman and chief executive officer of the Duke Power Co. based in Charlotte, NC. A native of Charlotte and the grandson of Duke Power's first engineer, Bill joined Duke Power in 1955 as a junior designer. He worked his way up through the ranks and, in 1982, he became chairman and chief executive officer. In 1989, he was named chairman and president of Duke Power. Upon his retirement in 1994, Bill Lee became Duke Power's first chairman emeritus.

Bill Lee was best known professionally for his work in the field of nuclear power. He was the former chairman of the board of the Institute of Nuclear Power Operations. He was also a catalyst in the founding of the World Association of Nuclear Operators, where he was named its first president in May 1989. The Charlotte Observer referred to Bill as "perhaps the foremost international consultant in, and statesman and diplomat for, the nuclear power industry."

Prior to his service to Duke Power, Bill graduated from Princeton University as Phi Beta Kappa and magna cum laude in civil engineering. He served in the U.S. Navy Civil Engineering Corp from 1951 to 1955, attaining the rank of lieutenant commander. Also, Bill received honorary doctorates from the University of South Carolina, the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, Johnson C. Smith University, Davidson College, and Clemson University.

Despite Bill Lee's many professional accomplishments, he also made a powerful contribution to the Charlotte community. A family man, with his wife Jan and their three children, Bill was an elder at Myers Park Presbyterian Church in Charlotte, where he even found time to teach Sunday school. He also served as a trustee to the Harris Foundation, the North Carolina Blumenthal Performing Arts Center at Charlotte Foundation, the Presbyterian Hospital Foundation, Queens College, and the conference board at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte Foundation.

I would also like to add that I lost a close and dear friend. Bill Lee's humor and charm were contagious to everybody around him. He was also one of the most giving people I have ever met. During my tenure as mayor of Charlotte, he was one of the people who helped our community recover from the disaster of Hurricane Hugo. On behalf of all of the millions of people whose lives are better because of Bill Lee's work, I extend my deepest sympathies to his wife Jan, and his entire family.

Finally, I have taken the liberty of attaching a poem that Bill's daughter, Lisa Lee-Morgan, wrote for her father and read at his funeral. Bill, we will miss you.

STAR-SPANGLED MAN

Star-spangled man, nor mere planet
But a sun, a body fused
By Proteus. Self-generating source of power,
Shining light, hour on hour.
Rush! wind, water, coal and coil,
Quick! Split the atom, fuse the soil,
Don't ever stop, embrace the toil,
Christ-man, His disciple loyal.

Blue eyes blazed like shooting stars
Beneath the lightening brows of Zeus
They let us know we'd his attention,
(For better or worse I'll mention)
Lover, hunter, father, friend,
Bully, preacher, Charlotte's kin.
Forgive us for we know not how
To tread the step he's led til now.

This warrior stood to lead the fight
Against the dying of the light.
The closing mind, the fading hope,
The grasping hand, could find no grope
In Bill Lee's camp, upon the lake
Where children frolic, swim and play.
He was our star, bright gravity
Round whom we danced til God took Lee.

JACK JACQUA, JOE MARSHALL OF OMEGA BOYS CLUB

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate Jack Jacqua and Joe Marshall of the Omega Boys Club in San Francisco on their recent award of the National Education Association's Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial Award.

The unrelenting determination and perseverance and faith of these two extraordinary men have succeeded in building the Omega Boys' Club from 15 members to 500 since the club's inception in 1987.

The Omega Boys' Club motivates at-risk youth to reject violence, succeed academically, gain adminission to college, offers employment and entrepreneurship training, adult and peer counseling, and affords them and important support network to get them off the streets and onto a successful life through higher learning.

One hundred members of the Omega Boys' Club are currently enrolled at institutions of higher learning throughout the country. Omega not only helped them achieve the funding to go to school, it also gave them the tools, the skills and the support network essential to achieve great things.

Jack Jacqua has been described as a surrogate father to many Potrero Hill families. Coming to Potrero Hill Middle School in 1973, he was compelled to challenge the drift afflicting students receiving the least encouragement and attention. "I'd like to see their lives have purpose and direction * * * All they need is for someone to care."

Joe Marshall, co-founder and father of the Omega Boys Club, hosts a weekly radio talk show for at risk youth and tours the country telling the inspirational Omega story. His belief and commitment to young people knows no limits, and at-risk youth have thrived under his care and direction.

These two men are heroes in the tradition of Martin Luther King, Jr.—recognized leaders who utilize outreach, education, and counseling to show young people that there are worthy alternatives to violence in their communities.

Mr. Speaker, I salute Jack and Joe and wish them all the best as they continue their important, award-winning work with youth at the Omega Boys Club. This award is just one of many they greatly deserve for turning the lives of at-risk young people around.

U.S. JUDGE ROBERT E. COYLE: DISTINGUISHED SERVICE RECOGNIZED

HON. GEORGE P. RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, my friend and Government colleague, U.S. District Judge Robert E. Coyle, recently assumed senior status, after distinguished service as chief judge of the Eastern District of California.

Those who know Judge Coyle well from having practiced with him in his earlier law career and later having appeared before him as a Federal judge are unstinting in their praise of his dedication to legal excellence. Indeed, in recognition of those qualities which distinguish Judge Coyle, a group of lawyers from my 19th Congressional District recently sent a letter to me that relates their sentiments.

I take pleasure in making that expression a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as well as adding my own tribute to Judge Coyle for the splendid service he continues to give his community and our country.

Re Honorable Robert E. Coyle.

DEAR GEORGE: The undersigned are all active members of the California Bar and admitted to practice before the Eastern District of California. Each of us has a significant federal practice.

We know that you are aware that Robert E. Coyle who served as Chief Judge of the Eastern District of California recently accepted senior status.

We believe that Judge Coyle's many years of dedicated public and civic service, his commitment to justice and fairness, his fabulous career as a lawyer and counselor—as well as his zeal for improved courtroom facilities to serve the public—and service to the community, are all deserving of recognition.

As you probably know, Bob Coyle is a native Fresnan. He attended local public schools and graduated from Fresno State University where he was the student body president.

Judge Coyle went on to Hastings College of the Law and from there to the Fresno County District Attorney's Office.

After leaving the D.A.'s Office, Bob joined what became McCormick, Barstow, Sheppard, Coyle & Best (now McCormick, Barstow, Sheppard, Wayte & Carruth) and quickly became a respected counselor of law.

Judge Coyle began his service on the federal bench after President Ronald Reagan nominated him and he was confirmed by the U.S. Senate in 1982. He became Chief Judge in 1990.

Judge Coyle, before whom all of us have appeared on many occasions, is a thoughtful, impartial, insightful and thoroughly prepared judge. Litigants and counsel are treated with respect in his courtroom and are given full opportunity to be heard. Additionally, those appearing before Judge Coyle are also benefitted by his considerable quick wit and sense of humor.

Judge Coyle has presided over many of the most complex and controversial matters presented to the federal courts in our area. His excellence as a legal scholar and adjudicator is well known in our community.

We respectfully request that these considerable accomplishments be made known through the United States by publishing this brief summary of Judge Coyle's career in the Congressional Record so that the citizens of this great land will learn more of the incredible contributions this man has made to our country.

Respectfully yours,

John H. Baker, Val W. Saldana, Donald R. Fischbach, Richard C. Watters, Lawrence E. Wayte, Lowell T. Carruth, Riley C. Walter, Michelle Belanger McNair, Debra J. Kazanjian.

IN MEMORY OF PAM LYNCHNER, VICTIM OF TWA FLIGHT 800

HON. KEN BENTSEN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize one of the victims of TWA flight 800, which crashed last night off Long Island, NY. Pam Lynchner, a Houstonian, was the founder and past president of Justice For All, a victims' rights organization. Mrs. Lynchner founded Justice For all in 1993, and it soon became the largest criminal justice reform organization in the State of Texas.

Mrs. Lynchner was a tireless advocate for the victims of violent crime. As a crime victim herself, Mrs. Lynchner dedicated her life to ensuring that victims' rights were protected and their voices heard. She was particularly adept at helping others work their way through the criminal justice system. Her efforts on behalf of other crime victims earned her numerous awards and a place as a national spokesperson for victims' rights.

Mrs. Lynchner served as a role model for the thousands of victims of violent crime. Her compassion, her dedication, and her enthusiasm will be sorely missed, but we as a society are better off because of what she contributed. Our thoughts and prayers are with Mrs. Lynchner's family, especially her husband Joe at this difficult time.

SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF THE BOMBING OF THE AMIA JEWISH COMMUNITY BUILDING

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on the second anniversary of the terrorist bombing of the AMIA Jewish community building in Buenos Aires to pay my respects to the hundreds of victims who perished or were wounded in the attack. My profound condolences go out to their family members whose grief remains unrelieved as all efforts to bring the terrorist perpetrators to justice have been fruitless.

That the second anniversary of this atrocity will pass with the terrorists still at large sends a potent message that this tragic episode demands our immediate and renewed attention. Although there is reason to be encouraged by the recent incarceration of several police officers in relation to the bombing, the case is far from a satisfactory resolution.

Regretfully, new and disturbing news has begun to surface as the investigation proceeds. It has been reported that Argentine Minister of Justice Rodolfo Barra, an official directly responsible for the investigation, was forced to leave his post after it was discovered that he was involved in an extremist, anti-Semitic organization in his youth. Furthermore, authorities in Buenos Aires have denied the families of the victims the right to place a memorial sculpture near the Argentine Supreme Court. All in all, I am concerned that the Argentinean Government is not pursuing the terrorist criminals in the most vigorous fashion.

It should be known that this tragedy has not been forgotten thanks to the efforts of some very special people. I would like to recognize my constituent and friend, Rabbi Avi Weiss and his organization AMCHA, the Coalition for Jewish Concerns, who have worked tirelessly to ensure that justice is carried out. Members of his organization will be participating in vigils simultaneously in New York and Buenos Aires today at 8:53 a.m. in remembrance of this tragedy.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my prayers for the victims of the Buenos Aires bombing and offer heartfelt condolences to their family members who survived them. At the same time, I call upon my colleagues to urge the Government of Argentina to reinvigorate its efforts at seeing the terrorists brought to justice.

INTRODUCTION OF THE ECONOMIC EQUITY ACT OF 1996

HON. ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, today, I am pleased to be an original sponsor of the Economic Equity Act of 1996 [EEA]. Three of my bills are included within this omnibus bill.

The first bill, included in title I of the EEA is the Federal Employees Fairness Act (H.R. 2133), will revise and improve the process for Federal employees to file employment discrimination complaints. Employees would have 180 days in which to file a discrimination complaint, and the Equal Opportunity Commission—rather than the accused agency—would be required to investigate the complaint within strict time limits. The bill also encourages sanctions to be levied against employees found guilty of discriminatory behavior.

The Equal Surety Bond Opportunity Act [ESBOA] is included within title II of the EEA, which addresses issues of economic opportunity. This title will help qualified women and minority-owned businesses to compete in the contracting business by helping them obtain adequate surety bonding.

It will create an environment in which small business firms, particularly those owned and controlled by minorities and women, can successfully obtain adequate surety bonding. This legislation will enable us to ferret out continuing biases in the industry. Whatever these prejudices may be, getting rid of them will open up the industry, creating entrepreneurial and employment opportunities and making the industry more competitive. I urge my colleagues to support this bill and help abolish the artificial impediments to the development and survival of emerging small businesses.

The last bill that I introduced this June and which is included in the EEA is the Work and Family Parental Equity Leave Act will ensure that employees who choose to care for a foster child or adopt a child will benefit from the same leave policy as their coworkers who are birth parents. This bill does not mandate that employers provide leave benefits beyond existing law, but rather that if they choose to provide such benefits they do so for all parents equitably.

IN HONOR OF THE MONK FAMILY REUNION

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, This July, the Monk family of New Haven hosts a reunion and weekend of events worthy of this exceptional family. They are celebrating their rich family history and the musical, athletic, and civic contributions of family members to the city of New Haven and the rest of the Nation. On Sunday, July 21, 1996 they will be commemorating their family's numerous achievements with a family parade. The will also be celebrating the 33rd Anniversary of the Monk Singers. I am delighted to rise today to salute and celebrate the Monk family.

The Monk family history is truly extraordinary. Family members have carefully documented the many branches of this extended family tree and have been able to identify a history that spans the continents of Africa, Europe, and North America. Pamela Monk Kelley, carrying on the work so important to her father, the late Conley F. Monk Sr., has painstakingly recorded a detailed history. She has included documentation of the links between the Monk and Cole families and outlined the Black, White, and Native American ancestry. This labor of love is a testament to the Monk family's dedication to preserving their history for future generations.

The Monk family has produced some remarkable individuals. Thelonius Monk, Jr. was born in 1917 and became a famous musician in the early 1940's. He pioneered the genre of music known as bebop, a revolutionary form of jazz. Indeed, his innovations have shaped the direction of jazz music for years. Outstanding talent in the Monk family is not limited to music but extends to athletics as well. Art Monk played for the Washington Redskins for 14 years before moving to the New York Jets. He played in four Super Bowls and broke the National Football League record for receiving passes.

Just as important as the Monk family's contributions to music and sports is their deep commitment to the communities in which they live. Conley F. Monk Sr., and his wife Olivia raised their own 9 children and also cared for over 45 foster children. Their children continue to carry on this tradition of caring for the community. Conley F. Monk, Jr. initiated, developed, and saw to the final completion of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Monument on Long Wharf in New Haven, CT.

The Monk family teaches us a lesson about the connections between people, about endless family ties that bring us closer together. They embody the idea that the true meaning of family is knowing we are part of something greater, something larger than ourselves. I am proud to join the people of the city of New Haven in honoring this great family.

STANDING UP FOR OUR NATION'S CHILDREN

HON. PATRICK J. KENNEDY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to join me in standing up for those who cannot stand up for themselves—our Nation's children.

Much of this Congress has focused upon strengthening the American family. Family Values have been the centerpoint of much of the legislation that we have considered in these 2 years. Welfare reform should be the opportunity for us to truly demonstrate how much we value our children and our families. Today, as leaders, we can ensure that all children grow up with a roof over their heads, food to eat, and medical care should they become sick. Instead, we are faced with a mean-spirited proposal intent on punishing children for being poor.

The GOP bill does not require work and encourage financial independence; instead it singles out children, the poor, the disabled, the elderly, and legal, taxpaying immigrants and punishes them for needing a helping hand. A recent GAO report expects that at least 1 million children to be forced to live in poverty should this bill pass. Yet we will continue to subsidize wealthy corporations, helping them to grow and prosper while our children will be starving and suffering.

In an era when the richer are getting richer I find it unconscionable that we should support such legislation. In the last decade, the richest 1 percent increased their share of the Nation's wealth to 47.2 percent, while the bottom 90 percent saw their share of pie shrink to 22.7 percent.

The Republican Party's panacea for our budget troubles is known as the block grant. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that if you are a small State with a struggling economy, block grants are a death sentence. A block grant does not reward who does the most, it rewards those who do the least. States like Rhode Island will be left to battle for funds to offer the most meager care and services and the casualties will be those in need will be left to fighting over the scraps.

Republican block grants replace and entitlement system with a lottery system. Our rights as American citizens will depend on whether we live in a State with a good economy and a low level of need. There is nothing subtle about what they are really doing when the talk about "block grants" in the same breath as "States' Rights." And our answer should be no different than it has always been, and that is: Justice should not depend on geography.

My State of Rhode Island boasts a myriad of immigrants who work hard every day, struggle to make ends meet and raise their families just like American citizens. And just like our citizens, they stumble upon hard times when a factory closes or the economy slows. By denying these individuals a helping hand in their time of need, simply because they are not American, we are rejecting the very principles this Nation was founded upon—equality, freedom, and opportunity. We are essentially demoting immigrants to second-class citizens by prohibiting them from accepting help from the system to which they contribute to every day.

If we really believe in family values, then let us do a better job of valuing our families. Let us continue the Democratic fight for what families value: job opportunities, health care, child care, and housing for everyone—not just a select few.

GREAT LAKES, GREAT FISHING

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, sportfishing is already an extremely popular activity in Michigan. In 1994, over 884,000 fishing licenses were issued and there were almost 900,000 boaters—the largest number of boaters in any State in the entire country. 1995 was an exciting year for many Michigan sports fishermen because we set three new records. The largest Longnose Gare, Mooneye, Red ear sunfish were all caught in Michigan last year. Furthermore, one new record has already been set for 1996. A 4 pound 2 ounce Gizzard Shad was caught on Lake St. Clair on May 12.

With such a positive experience, it should be no surprise that the In-Fisherman Professional Walleye Trail anglers are holding the Lubrimatic/Stren Eastern Pro-Am tournament today through Saturday on Saginaw Bay and into Lake Huron, with its headquarters in AuGress, in my congressional district. One hundred and thirty professional anglers will be joined by amateurs as they compete over 1,300 square miles to catch the biggest walleyes they can. This is a regional tournament leading to the national championship this September in Bismark, ND.

Sportsmen are among the best environmentalists we will ever find. They know the importance of the maintenance of habitat and good management practices. In fact, in 1979 fishing groups joined with local governments to form a Saginaw Bay Consortium to raise and stock Saginaw Bay. The Saginaw Bay Walleye Club and the National Guard Construction Battalion built points and upgraded abandoned sewage treatment plants. They raised walleyes, having planted more than 1 million in the early to mid 1980's. Later they were joined by Arenac, Huron, and Losco counties in raising more fingerlings, so that now about 750,000 walleyes are stocked every other year, and northern pike are raised in the intervening year.

Many people think of Michigan as the car State. As proud as we are of our auto industry, we are equally proud of the marvelous recreational and tourism opportunities offered throughout our state. In fact, I have more shore line in my congressional district than is contained in most other States, including many coastal States.

Blue skies, blue waters, great scenery, great people, and great fishing. This is what the anglers at the In-Fisherman Professional Walleye Trail are experiencing right now, and this is what is waiting for anyone who visits the Great Lakes State, Michigan. I welcome all of our visitors, and invite many, many more.

SUPPORT A LOAN GUARANTEE FOR THE OLIVENHAIN WATER STORAGE PROJECT

HON. RANDY "DUKE" CUNNINGHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation that will help north San Diego County meet its water needs in the event of an emergency and also encourage the Federal Government to shift its role from that of planner and builder of expensive western water projects to the more cost-effective role of being a facilitator and partner in regional efforts to solve regional problems. My legislation will authorize the Secretary of Interior to provide a Federal loan guarantee to the developer of the Olivenhain Water Storage Project, a project currently being planned by the Olivenhain Municipal Water District in my district of north San Diego County.

The Olivenhain Water Storage Project is a critical part of the effort to increase the independence and economic stability of north San Diego County. Currently, the north county is almost 100 percent dependent on imported water from northern California and the Colorado River to meet its residential, industrial, and agricultural/horticultural needs. Potential drought conditions, environmental needs at the source, and demand elsewhere in the State all contribute to a rapidly rising cost of imported water, the cost of water to north San Diego County has risen 55 percent in the last 5 years. Additionally, an earthquake along any one of the three major faults underlying the pipelines that bring imported water to San Diego County could cut off water supply to the region for up to 2 months. The residents of north county must be assured that water will be available should a natural disaster occur.

The Olivenhain Water Storage Project will provide emergency water supplies for over 1 million people, including those living in the cities of Oceanside, Carlsbad, Solana Beach, Encinitas, and San Marcos, as well as portions of the city of San Diego. The San Diego County Water Authority supports my legislation, as they recognize that the lack of emergency water storage in San Diego County must be addressed immediately. A copy of their letter of endorsement is attached at the end of this statement.

The project is fully permitted after going through more than 10 years of environmental review. Working together with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, a biological resource management plan has been developed that will enhance regional habitat preservation while also providing 17 miles of nature, hiking and bicycle trails to the community.

The proposed loan guarantee program reflects the changing role played by the Federal Government in developing water projects in the West. Rather than having the Federal Government contribute funds, construct the project and control its management, the loan guarantee program allows the Government to leverage its limited funds to allow for cost-effective private financing alternatives and encourages public-private partnerships in the building and operation of the project. This limited Federal participation in the financing of water infrastructure projects allows the project developers to secure private loans at rates that are competitive with municipal tax-exempt financing, while preserving the limited bonding capacity of local governments for other crucial community needs like public safety and schools.

The Olivenhain Municipal Water District is considering the possibility of utilizing a public-private partnership such as I have described for the development of the Olivenhain Water Storage Project. Under this scenario, the district would competitively select a private partner to build and finance the project, which would then be leased back to the district. No Federal taxpayer funds would be involved in the financing of the project, and the local ratepayers will benefit from the cost-efficient construction and management of the project.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency estimates that the costs of complying with the Safe Drinking Water Act and the Clean Water Act will be nearly $200 billion in the next 15 years. Neither local governments nor the Federal Government have the unlimited resources necessary to meet these costs. However, through a loan guarantee program such as the one that will be demonstrated under this legislation, limited Federal resources can be the catalyst for the development of private capital to meet these needs.

There have already been congressional hearings on legislation to create a loan guarantee program—April 18, 1996. Opposition to that legislation (H.R. 2781) centered around the potential exposure of the Federal Government to a loan default and the elimination of the existing direct lending program at the Bureau of Reclamation. This new bill addresses those concerns by: First, limiting the loan guarantee authority to the development of one project; second, requiring that project developers secure any loans guaranteed by the Government; and third, allowing the existing loan program to remain unaffected by this new proposal.

The Overseas Private Investment Corporation provides tens of millions of loan guarantees for the private development of water infrastructure in foreign countries. Shouldn't we afford our own communities in the United States with the same opportunities for competitive infrastructure development?

My legislation will demonstrate that loan guarantees provide a cost-effective alternative for Federal assistance in financing water infrastructure development. I urge my colleagues to support this measure. I have attached a letter of support from the San Diego County Water Authority.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY
WATER AUTHORITY,
San Diego, CA, May 20, 1996.

Re support of Government loan guarantee for water storage project in San Diego County.

Hon. RANDY "DUKE" CUNNINGHAM,
Congress of the United States, Cannon House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CUNNINGHAM: The San Diego County Water Authority has been working diligently to complete an Environmental Impact Report (EIR) under CEQA and Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) under NEPA for emergency storage in San Diego County. Currently four alternatives are under consideration. The Water Authority staff expects the Board of Directors to select a preferred alternative and certify the EIR in July 1996. Certification of the EIS and granting of a 404 Permit by the Corps of Engineers would occur months later.

The Olivenhain Water Storage Project is a component of the Water Authority's emergency storage alternative known as System 25. The Olivenhain water storage and treatment project is needed, whether or not the Water Authority and Corps choose System 25 for the Authority's project. The Water Authority is aware that Olivenhain is pursuing legislation to obtain a government loan guarantee under the Dept. of Interior's Small Projects Act. The Water Authority staff supports the Olivenhain Water District's endeavors to obtain such guarantee and to develop a storage project in northern San Diego County; whether this project is pursued independently or in partnership with the Water Authority or others.

San Diego County, including the North County, has an acute lack of emergency storage. Olivenhain, other member agencies and the Water Authority are working together to improve this situation. If you have any questions on the San Diego County Water Authority's Emergency Storage Project, please contact me or Ken Steele, the Authority's project manager. If you have any additional questions on the Olivenhain Water Storage Project, you may contact David McCollom, General Manager of the Olivenhain Municipal Water District at (619) 753-6466.

Thank you very much for your interest in your projects.

Sincerely,

MAUREEN STAPLETON,
General Manager,
San Diego County Water Authority.

A CELEBRATION OF SUBURBAN LIFE

HON. STEPHEN HORN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, when the men and women came home from the Second World War, they moved into the sprawling suburbs that were springing up across America. There, they quickly settled into lives in which they worked hard, raised their children, and played by the rules. Not the kind of lives that make headlines—but precisely the kind that make nations strong. Until now, no one had chronicled the world of these quiet heros.

Author Donald Waldie, who grew up in one of these postwar communities—Lakewood in California's 38th district—has filled that void. Mr. Waldie has made a significant contribution to American literature with the publication of his book "Holy Land," in which he recounts the unique joys and frustrations of American suburban life. Not surprisingly, he reveals that the backbone of America lies in the families who live quietly and unremarkably in these communities.

Lakewood is a proud part of the 38th congressional district. The beautiful tree-lined streets, an attractive civic center in which citizens find a responsive government, a vibrant business and professional community, and marvelous senior and recreational programs which welcome those of all ages—that is Lakewood. People sense the quality of Lakewood when they enter its boundaries and know their judgment was right when they go elsewhere.

I submit the following article from the Los Angeles Times which details Mr. Waldie's achievement.

[From the Los Angeles Times, July 5, 1996]

A LITTLE PIECE OF HEAVEN IN LAKEWOOD

(By Thomas Curwen)

On most Saturday mornings, Donald Waldie is out weeding his frontyard, which he will say desperately needs it, but don't be deceived. The azaleas are a little burned out, but the lawn is green and well-manicured.

Waldie lives in Lakewood, and his home is one of the hundreds of homes that make up the nearly anonymous patchwork of suburbs in southeast Los Angeles County. Little distinguishes Lakewood—unless you recall the brief notoriety of the Spur Posse, the group of teenagers who a few years back made it a cruel sport to have sex with as many girls as possible.

Today Lakewood's tree-lined streets and well-maintained homes are quiet and almost defy attention, unless of course you're interested in the almost mystically simple qualities of everyday life in a classic American suburb. Waldie is, and has lovingly rendered his perceptions in "Holy Land" (Norton), a memoir of growing up—and still living—in one of the largest postwar housing developments in the country.

Beginning in 1950 and continuing for almost three years, Lakewood was a flurry of building. As many as 100 homes were started each day, more than 500 a week, and by the end—33 months later—17,500 had been raised.

When considering this astonishing boom, Waldie breaks ranks with critics who disparage sprawl. He paints instead a picture of a community of simple and practical values that worked 50 years ago and still works today. A recent survey of homeowners in Los Angeles County backs him up. The average Lakewood resident lives here 15.6 years—the longest length of stay of any municipality in the county.

As the public information officer for Lakewood, Waldie, 47, makes his living explaining the city to its residents and the press. That he defends the place might not be surprising, but unlike the boosters who sold homes here in the 1950s on the benefits of a regional shopping center (the Lakewood Center Mall was one of the first and largest in the country) and a garbage disposal in every kitchen, he focuses on the spiritual benefits of life here.

"These are not perfect places, and the people who live in them are not perfect," admits Waldie, a soft-spoken man who picks his words carefully. "But my book is about the possibility of leading a redeemed life in this kind of suburban place—a life that has some value to others and a life in which one gets saved."

Welcome to the first church of the suburb. Let "Holy Land" be your bible.

Comprising more than 300 minichapters, ranging from a single sentence to a page and written much like an extended prose poem, "Holy Land" is the story of Waldie's faith and his notion that a kind of salvation takes place within the context of a suburb like Lakewood. Responsibility and obligation, he will tell you, are the linchpins of this faith, holding neighbors and communities together to make this a real holy land.

If you look carefully behind a scrim of materialism—these homes and these yards—you will see that the simple upkeep of a frontyard is symbolic of a complicated social contract between neighbors.

Waldie—whom Buzz magazine described in its list of 100 notables as having "a passion and eloquence worthy of Joan Didion"—composed the chapters of "Holy Land" during the half-hour it takes him to walk to or from work. Poor eyesight keeps him from driving. He lives alone, almost like a monk, in the house his parents bought in 1946. He attends Catholic church.

The homes in his neighborhood would probably sell in the high $150,000s; most have three bedrooms, one bath and a detached two-car garage. Windows look into neighbors' windows. Cars, trucks and campers are parked in driveways and in the street. Some lawns are scruffy; some are immaculate. It is, in Waldie's words a place for the "not-quite middle class."

These straight-arrow streets and single-family homes are as much a part of the American landscape as shopping malls and 7-Elevens and from here to Levittown, Long Island, have been easy targets. Writer Ron Rosenbaum described his 1956 screenplay for "The Invasion of the Body Snatchers" as "about the horror of being in the 'burbs." In his influential 1964 book "God's Own Junkyard" (Holt, Rinehart & Winston), architect Peter Blake wrote: "The kind of stratified, anesthetized and standardized society being bred in America's present-day Suburbia is not one to look forward to with pleasure."

Nowadays critics are less unkind. Robert Bellah, principal author of "Habits of the Heart: Individualism & Commitment in American Life" (University of California Press), a 1985 diagnosis of what ails American communities, today sees suburbs as "a catastrophe for this country." First, their population density is low, leading to a wasteful use of land; second, they cater to the automobile, which is expensive and polluting; and third, they represent a closed door to what's happening in urban centers.

"People [in Lakewood] may be able to look out for themselves," Bellah says. "But what about the rest of society?"

Waldie is not surprised by the anger and the harsh language the suburban experience can evoke.

"These are furious, vituperative attacks on the kind of suburban space that Lakewood best exemplified," he says. "Willful ignorance about these places is one of the reasons I wrote 'Holy Land.'"

Take a Saturday walk through Jose del Valle Park in Lakewood and you will see what the critics probably didn't take into account. People really seem to enjoy living here.

Children scramble for the playground equipment. Baseball diamonds are packed with players; parents cheer children from the bleachers. Waldie pauses to watch a foul ball fly into a quiet street. He wrote "Holy Land" with the presumption that the ordinary lives of ordinary people have a unique value.

In 1949, Louis Boyar, Mark Taper and Ben Weingart purchased 3,500 acres of farmland to create this landscape. Boyar who had built homes on Long Beach in the 1930s, was responsible for the plan. He used a simple formula—straight streets at right angles and 5,000-square-foot lots—parameters that were surprisingly prescient. Urban planners today, in an attempt to built more friendly communities, are returning to straight-line grids, which seem to be more conducive to neighborliness than curved streets and cul-de-sacs.

But Boyar did more than plot 17,500 homes and a scattering of social amenities, Waldie says. He built a community out of his heart, creating a network for possible social interactions that reinforce common values. Values that make Jose del Valle Park so popular. Values that seem at times forgotten—or at least under-reported—in the country.

Of course, the motives of the developers were not entirely altruistic. By the time they dissolved their corporation, they had made almost $12 million—money that ironically was made from a community that kept Jews, like themselves, as well as blacks and Mexicans from living here.

Filled with sad truths and terrible ironies, "Holy Land" chronicles the distance between 1950 and now. Here was a suburb, after all whose major selling point was a shopping center that could double as a fallout shelter; but rather than ridicule these faces, Waldie writes with a poignant mix of knowing and compassion.

"The critics of suburbs say that you and I live narrow lives," one mini-chapter reads. "I agree. My life is narrow. From one perspective or another, all our lives are narrow. Only when lives are placed side by side do they seem larger."

Waldie will admit, however, that not all lives fit into this side-by-side pattern. "Holy Land" does look at a few disconnected people who live outside the tacit social contracts that connect neighbors. There's the man who filled his yard with dead machinery and used building supplies. There's the woman who believed that the dead from the nearby aircraft plant were secretly buried beneath her house.

Conspicuously absent from the book, however, is mention of the Spur Posse, the 1993 story that yanked Lakewood out of its peaceful anonymity. To a nation worried about its apparent loss of morals, the case of these high school athletes who gave each other "points" for sexual conquests was deplorable, especially coming from such an all-American community like Lakewood.

As Waldie sees it. "The Spur Posse was less about the decline of the suburbs and more a lesson in how charismatic individuals can create evil.

"If you looked at Lakewood in 1993 and projected a straight-line evolution from that point, I can see how you might have imagined a collapse of the social infrastructure, but that has not happened. There is some resiliency here."

Not only does he leave out references to the Spur Posse, but he also glosses over the time he was nearly robbed at gunpoint walking home from work. Snakes may live in the grass here, but you won't find them in Waldie's yard.

Perhaps denial keeps the residents here safe—as it did in the 1950s with regard to the bomb and racism, so too for the 1990s with gangs and neighborhood violence.

When writing about the ever-present Southern California danger of earthquakes—apparently the homes here are built so lightly, they pose relatively little danger to the owners and "might even shelter us"—Waldie concludes that "the burden of our habits do the same."

"I believe that accepting obligations because you're obliged to is probably the saving strength against all that would further erode our social institutions," he explains. And as he turns to weed a yard that barely needs it, Waldie joins the dance that connects residents to the community—past and present.

THE MICROENTERPRISE ACT

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to introduce H.R. 3846, the Microenterprise Act. The bill is a historic alliance between the administration, microenterprise groups and the Congress behind the cause of microenterprise development to help the poorest of the poor work their way out of poverty.

We have all heard of the Grameen Bank and its success in Bangladesh. Today, the Grameen Bank is one of the largest banks in Bangladesh. It is important to note that the microenterprise movement is not just about Grameen. In Bolivia, BancoSol has become the largest lender in Bolivia, solely relying on small, microenterprise loans. BancoSol is so big, it now borrows funds from the New York market to continue its service to Bolivia's poor. Other microenterprise institutions dot the planet, including some here at home, even in my home State of New York.

This bill breaks new ground. It provides two new tailor-make authorities under the Foreign Assistance Act for microenterprise grants and microenterprise loans. The bill calls on the administration to focus on loans to the poorest of the poor, mainly through private, voluntary organizations, nongovernmental organizations, and other worthy institutions.

I am pleased that the administration supports this bill. I look forward to working with Mr. HAMILTON and other members of my committee and our colleagues in the Senate to seek its enactment before this Congress adjourns.

H.R. 3846

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Microenterprise Act".

SEC. 2. MICRO- AND SMALL ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT CREDITS.

Secton 108 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151f) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 108. MICRO- AND SMALL ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT CREDITS.

"(a) FINDINGS AND POLICY.—The Congress finds and declares that—

"(1) the development of micro- and small enterprise, including cooperatives, is a vital factor in the stable growth of developing countries and in the development and stability of a free, open, and equitable international economic system;

"(2) it is, therefore, in the best interests of the United States to assist the development of the private sector in development countries and to engage the United States private sector in that process;

"(3) the support of private enterprise can be served by programs providing credit, training, and technical assistance for the benefit of micro- and small enterprises; and

"(4) programs that provide credit, training, and technical assistance to private institutions can serve as a valuable complement to grant assistance provided for the purpose of benefiting micro- and small private enterprise.

"(b) PROGRAM.—To carry out the policy set forth in subsection (a), the President is authorized to provide assistance to increase the availability of credit to micro- and small enterprises lacking full access to credit, including through—

"(1) loans and guarantees to credit institutions for the purpose of expanding the availability of credit to micro- and small enterprises;

'(2) training programs for lenders in order to enable them to better meet the credit needs of micro- and small entrepreneurs; and

"(3) training programs for micro- and small entrepreneurs in order to enable them to make better use of credit and to better manage their enterprises.".

SEC. 3. MICROENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT GRANT ASSISTANCE.

Chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

SEC. 129. MICROENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT GRANT ASSISTANCE.

"(a) AUTHIORIZATION.—(1) In carrying out this part, the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development is authorized to provide grant assistance for programs of credit and other assistance for microenterprises in developing countries.

"(2) Assistance authorized under paragraph (1) shall be provided through organizations that have a capacity to develop and implement microenterprise programs, including particularly—

"(A) United States and indigenous private and voluntary organizations;

"(B) United States and indigenous credit unions and cooperative organizations; or

"(C) other indigenous governmental and nongovernmental organizations.

"(3) Approximately one-half of the credit assistance authorized under paragraph (1) shall be used for poverty lending programs, including the poverty lending portion of mixed programs. Such programs—

"(A) shall meet the needs of the very poor members of society, particularly poor women; and

"(B) should provide loans of $300 or less in 1995 United States dollars to such poor members of society.

"(4) The Administrator should continue support for mechanisms that—

"(A) provide technical support for field missions;

"(B) strengthen the institutional development of the intermediary organizations described in paragraph (2); and

"(C) share information relating to the provision of assistance authorized under paragraph (1) between such field missions and intermediary organizations.

"(b) MONITORING SYSTEM.—In order to maximize the sustainable development impact of the assistance authorized under subsection (a)(1), the Administrator should establish a monitoring system that—

"(1) establishes performance goals for such assistance and expresses such goals in an objective and quantifiable form, to the extent feasible;

"(2) establishes performance indicators to be used in measuring or assessing the achievement of the goals and objectives of such assistance; and

"(3) provides a basis for recommendations for adjustments to such assistance to enhance the sustainable development impact of such assistance, particularly the impact of such assistance on the very poor, particularly poor women.".

SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF THE AMIA JEWISH CENTER BOMBING IN ARGENTINA

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 18, 1996

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my colleagues' attention to the second anniversary of the horrific terrorist attack in Buenos Aires, Argentina, against the Jewish community center. On July 18, 1994, a car bomb was detonated outside of the seven-story building in Buenos Aires that housed the AMIA [Association Mutual Israelita Argentina] and DAIA [Delegacion de Asociaciones Israelitas Argentinas]. That barbaric act took the lives of 86 innocent people and injured more than 300 others. To date, those responsible remain at large.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Congress have repeatedly expressed to the Argentine authorities our firm conviction that they must do everything in their power to solve this case, and the as yet unsolved case of the 1992 bombing of the Israeli embassy in Buenos Aires. While we are encouraged by recent arrests of several Argentine police officers in connection with the ongoing investigation, clearly much more needs to be done.

I commend my colleagues' attention to the following two letters which were sent this day to President Menem of the Republic of Argentina. The first was signed by 42 Members of Congress and expresses the view, held most certainly by all Members, that Argentine authorities must redouble their efforts to find and prosecute the terrorists who committed these heinous crimes. The second letter is from Abraham Foxman, National Director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. Mr. Foxman cites the recent resignation of the Minister of Justice and applauds the opportunity for President Menem to appoint an individual truly committed to solving these cases.

Mr. Speaker, on this second anniversary of the AMIA bombing, we must restate our determination to fight global terrorism and to support friendly governments who wish to join this struggle. As Argentina continues successfully its evolution to full democracy, we must urge the Argentine Government to stand fast with the United States against the mutual enemy of democracy—global terrorism—and to redouble its efforts to solve these cases of terrorism:

JULY 18, 1996.

His Excellency CARLOS SAUL MENEM,
President of the Republic of Argentina, Buenos Aires, Argentina

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We are writing to you on the second anniversary of the bombing of the AMIA Jewish Community Center to express our dismay at the lack of resolution in the ongoing investigation of that bombing and the 1992 Israeli Embassy bombing in Buenos Aires. We fervently hope that the recent arrests of several police officers will yield a long-awaited break in the AMIA case.

Although Members of Congress previously have written to you on this subject, we strongly believe that the anniversary of this tragic event requires us to restate our conviction that Argentine authorities must conduct a reinvigorated effort to find and prosecute those responsible.

We appreciate the Argentine government's desire to successfully complete these investigations and deliver justice to the victims and their families. However, despite cooperation from United States government experts and years of investigation by Argentine authorities, the murderers are still at large. This is an intolerable situation.

No citizens of any country should have to live under the threat of terrorism. Unfortunately, until those responsible for the bombings in Argentina are apprehended, the Jewish community of Argentina will live under the threat of more terrorism, and Argentina will appear to be a haven for terrorists from around the world.

Mr. President, as we have learned from our own horrendous experiences with terrorism, these cases are difficult, but not impossible to solve. With sufficient will and effort, successful prosecution can eventually be achieved. We urge you to redouble your government's efforts in this task.

We look forward to your response to our previous inquiry for information on the status of these investigations and to working with you to bring the guilty to justice.

Cordially,

Tom Lantos, Jon Fox, Ben Gilman, Gary Ackerman, William Martini, Robert Torricelli, Ron Dellums, Stephen Horn, Howard Berman, Martin Frost, Peter King, Robert Menendez, Sander Levin, Jennifer Dunn, Carrie Meek, Charles Schumer, Herb Bateman, Martin Meehan, Michael Doyle, Jerrold Nadler, Sidney Yates, Ken Calvert, Peter Deutsch, Frank Tejeda, Lane Evans, Nita Lowey, John Olver, Rodney Frelinghuysen, Bob Filner, Steve Stockman, Steve Chabot, Zoe Lofgren, Ben Cardin, Peter Blute, Cliff Stearns, Elizabeth Furse, Sherrod Brown, Ilean Ros-Lehtinen, Victor Frazer, Jay Kim, Cynthia McKinney, and Rick Lazio.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE,
July 16, 1996.

Casa Rosada, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: July 18 marks the anniversary of one of the most horrible dates in Argentinean history—the bomb attack that destroyed the AMIA headquarters, snuffed out innumerable lives, and shattered the security of the Jewish community. A view of the site leaves an indelible image of the tragedy and reminds many of the 30's and the horrors of Nazi Germany or Stalinist terror.

The world continues to anxiously await a solution to this crime by the democracy that is now Argentina. The occasion of the resignation of the Minister of Justice provides an opportunity for the appointment of an individual truly committed to democracy, and to finding those responsible for the bombing.

At the same time, we are particularly concerned about the recent appointment of Mr. Horacio graga as investigator for the official TV station. Mr. Fraga is an individual with a known racist and anti-Semitic background. This appointment raises serious concern in the Argentinean Jewish community, as well as among Jews throughout the world.

Democracy is a difficult process which requires discipline and vigilance by government and private citizens. The clear actions of your administration in these matters will send a strong signal that democracy and the rights of Argentinean minorities are paramount to your administration. You assured us of these points during the visit of an ADL delegation last year, and we hope that it will become a reality for Argentina and its communities.

Looking forward to your response,

Sincerely,

ABRAHAM H. FOXMAN,
National Director.

SENATE—Friday, July 19, 1996

The Senate met at 9 a.m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Gracious Lord, You have placed within each of us a conscience as the voice of our deep inner self. Over the years our consciences have been molded by what we have been taught is true and right. We thank You for a conscience rooted in the Ten Commandments and guided on Your spirit. You are the Potter, our conscience the clay; mold our values after Your way. We ask this not just for our own personal relationships, but also for the responsibilities of leadership You have entrusted to us.

You want to develop the future of this Nation through the leadership of women and men of this Senate and all of us who labor with them. So refine our consciences; purify any dross until You can see Your own nature reflected in the refined gold of Your priorities of righteousness, justice, mercy. Give us Your heart for the poor and those who suffer. Keep us faithful to Your vision for this Nation so clearly revealed to our Founding Fathers and Mothers. Set us ablaze with patriotism and loyalty. Then continue to speak to us through our consciences. May we work out in specifics what You have worked into the fiber of our character. We commit ourselves anew to seek Your guidance and follow it this day. Give us courage to follow the convictions You have developed in our consciences. In the name of Jesus who taught us that we can know the truth and the truth will set us free. Amen.

Therefore, all Members should be prepared to remain in or around the Senate Chamber to allow these votes to be completed in a timely manner.

Following these votes, the Senate will continue to debate amendments to reconciliation. However, any votes ordered on those amendments will be ordered to begin at 9:30 on Tuesday.

I remind my colleagues, if they still intend to offer their amendments, those that were listed, they must offer them today or Monday.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that all votes ordered after the first vote be reduced to 10 minutes in length, and that no second-degree amendments be in order to any of those amendments in the voting sequence that is scheduled for today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4903

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the Murray amendment. Under the previous order, the question occurs on amendment No. 4903, offered by the Senator from Washington [Mrs. MURRAY].

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mrs. MURRAY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mrs. MURRAY. Madam President, since last night when I offered this amendment, I have been contacted by a number of Members from both sides of the aisle who would like to work with me to perhaps come to an agreement on this issue. I ask, therefore, unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendment is withdrawn.

The amendment (No. 4903) was withdrawn.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, before you call the next amendment, I understand the next scheduled amendment, under the order, would have been a Faircloth amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. It is now my understanding that is being worked out and the Senator seeks, and I understand it is all right with the minority, that that amendment be set aside until Tuesday. Then we would proceed to the Breaux amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. So I propose that as a unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, Senator BREAUX was not aware he would be up first, so I suggest the absence of a quorum for a couple of minutes so he can be advised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Senator BREAUX has arrived. I think under our sequencing and the order, we have Senator BREAUX's motion to waive the point of order that is up now, and there are 2 minutes on each side.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Equally divided.

Mr. DOMENICI. Two minutes equally divided.

Mr. EXON. May I clarify one point. As I understand it, the Breaux amendment will be the first amendment that will be voted upon; is that right? That will be a 15-minute vote? Have we ordered 10 minute votes thereafter? Is that the order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. That is the order.

Mr. EXON. Thank you.

Mr. BREAUX addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. BREAUX. I thank the Chair.

MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET ACT—AMENDMENT NO. 4910

Mr. BREAUX. Madam President, my colleagues, what we are trying to do with welfare reform is very simple. I think we can all agree we should be tough on work, we should be good for kids. Everybody knows we should put work first, but in doing that we should not put children last.

I am afraid the Republican bill, without my amendment, does exactly that simply because of this. The Republican plan says that after you take the parent off of AFDC assistance, you forget about the children. You absolutely forbid the State in their own wisdom to determine whether they should give any assistance to the children who are innocent victims of welfare at the sins of the parents. We should not be punishing the children for what their parents have not done correctly.

So let us be as tough as we can on work, make the parent go to work, but when the parent is taken off welfare, for God's sake, can't we as a nation at least allow the States to use their block grant money to provide the things that a child needs in order to survive in this country? That is the issue. Are we going to disregard the children? Or are we going to help the children while we are so tough on the parents? My amendment, I think, should pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has 1 minute.

Mr. ROTH. Madam President, I strongly oppose the Breaux amendment which would seriously undermine the real 5-year time limit on welfare assistance. One of the most important features of welfare reform is that recipients must understand that public assistance is temporary, not a way of life.

Opponents of the 5-year time limit would have the American people believe this bill would abandon children. This is simply not true. Families and children would still be eligible for food stamps, Medicaid, housing assistance, WIC, and dozens of other means-tested programs.

Let me reiterate that S. 1956, the bill before us, is identical to H.R. 4 on this issue when it passed the Senate on a vote of 87 to 12 last September. The Senate rejected amendments to weaken the 5-year time limit then, and it should do so again.

If States want to use vouchers to provide services beyond the time limit, they could do so with State funds or with title XX funds of social services block grants. The State can also exempt 20 percent of the caseload from the limit for those truly hardship cases. I urge the defeat of the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, this is a new mandate, extremely costly, a huge new bureaucracy; and nothing in the bill prohibits the States from using their own money to do this.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, the bill provides for a lifetime limit of 5 years for welfare benefits. This means that there is an actual drop-dead date so that families are held truly accountable for their choices. Knowing that there is a concern for those who are unable to work, the bill allows a 20-percent hardship exemption from the lifetime limit.

Working Americans live in a system where if they don't show up for work, they are not paid and are likely to lose their job. They want welfare recipients to live with that same reality. Taxpaying Americans don't understand why their hard work is subsidizing those who are not working.

According to the mail I receive in my office, working Iowans believe that welfare recipients ought to have to work also. And they believe welfare recipients should not be able to receive benefits forever.

Mr. McCAIN. Madam President, the Personal Responsibility, Work Opportunity, and Medicaid Restructuring Act of 1996 will dramatically improve our welfare system. By requiring able-bodied welfare recipients to work, it will encourage welfare families to move from dependency to self-sufficiency. In addition, adult recipients who refuse to engage in required work will have their benefits reduced, and individuals will be able to receive federally funded benefits for more than 5 years, or fewer at the option of the State. In recognition of the fact that not all families will be able to enter the work force effectively, the States are given a 20-percent hardship exemption to the 5-year limit on benefits.

Today, my colleague, Senator BREAUX, introduced an amendment which would have provided vouchers of those families which were denied cash assistance as a result of these limitations. Because this provision would undermine the important goal of encouraging families to work and move off welfare, and because the most troubled families will be protected by the hardship exemption, I have decided to vote against the amendment. This vote does, however, raise a number of issues which should be addressed by the conference committee, including the impact which ending cash benefits may have on foster care costs in the States, and the impact of the benefits limitation on children.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on agreeing to the motion to waive the Budget Act in relation to the Breaux amendment No. 4910. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 51, the nays are 47.

Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained and the amendment falls.

AMENDMENT NO. 4911

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question occurs on the motion to table amendment No. 4911 offered by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. FAIRCLOTH].

The Chair recognizes Senator FAIRCLOTH for 1 minute.

Mr. FAIRCLOTH. Madam President, the welfare bill before us requires that minors must live at home with a parent as a condition of receiving assistance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will withhold, the Senator cannot be heard. The Senate will come to order.

The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. FAIRCLOTH. Madam President, this amendment states that if that parent is currently receiving welfare benefits and has been for the last 3 years, then the minor may not receive cash benefits. If the parent is currently receiving welfare, and the minor child is herself alone living at home, then we are requiring that three generations of welfare recipients live under one roof.

My amendment would ensure that when we require three generations of welfare recipients to live under one roof, and there is a clear history of welfare dependency in that household, then we will only send one cash check.

My amendment is not intended to reduce benefits, and it does not prohibit the State from providing assistance in any noncash form—food, whatever. The amendment simply would limit the amount of cash that is given to households with three generations of welfare where there is a clear history of welfare dependency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized for 1 minute.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you, Madam President.

The underlying bill denies assistance to teenage moms who do not live at home. Democrats agree with this. We have this in our bill. But what the Faircloth amendment says is, you will be denied assistance as a teenage mom if you live at home if the home you are living in has received welfare.

I have to say this: This Faircloth amendment sets up two categories of teenage moms, one category that gets aid when they live at home and one category that does not.

I thought we were for family unity. I think that is the question Members must ask themselves: Are we for family unity? If we are, we should vote down the Faircloth amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

NOT VOTING—2

Nunn
Pryor

The amendment (No. 4911) was rejected.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LEVIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. May we have order, please, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Can we have order in the Chamber, please.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, Senators have asked how much longer will we be voting. It looks to me, if we can stay close to the 10 minutes, we will be out of here before noon.

Can I ask, how long did we take on the last vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Approximately 12 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. We have six amendments remaining, so if we can stay near the 10 minutes, you can do your own arithmetic. It looks to me like an hour and 30 minutes is what it would take. We never get it done that efficiently, but that is sort of what you ought to be looking at.

Regular order.

MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET ACT—AMENDMENT NO. 4912

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question now occurs on agreeing to the motion to waive the Budget Act for the consideration of amendment No. 4912 offered by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BIDEN]. There are 2 minutes of debate equally divided.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, may I point out that yesterday 46 Democrats voted for an amendment by our distinguished Democratic leader which had a conditional entitlement. It maintained for a period of 5 years a right of a child to some public support if needed. This measure would abolish that entitlement in title IV of the Social Security Act, an entitlement which is provided for the aged, the unemployed, for the disabled. We would only strip the Social Security Act of the provision for children. I hope Democrats, who put that legislation in place 60 years ago, will not vote to repeal it today. It is not reform. It is repeal.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. What bill are you referring to, I ask the Senator from New York, this bill that is pending or the underlying bill?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I spoke of Mr. DASCHLE's amendment yesterday, and I spoke to Mr. BIDEN and Mr. SPECTER's amendment today.

Mr. DOMENICI. I see. All right.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I believe I have 1 minute in support of this legislation. I said yesterday the Biden-Specter bill is a question of, is it better than the underlying bill? The underlying bill does the same thing the Senator just suggested that this bill does. The differences are, we save $53 billion. There is $3 billion in work funds for the States, individual responsibility contracts, no food stamp block grants, as the underlying bill has, and the State option for vouchers, among other things.

I think this is a much preferable bill than the underlying bill, and I would encourage my colleagues to vote for the Biden-Specter amendment, which is better known, quite frankly, as the Castle-Tanner bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has elapsed.

Mr. DOMENICI. Wait a minute, Mr. President. I do not believe that our time has elapsed. Nobody authorized the Senator from New York to speak in opposition. He spoke. I did not object. I was, but I saw he was on the right track.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that is the case, the Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I strongly oppose the Specter-Biden substitute. While it does include some of the provisions of S. 1956 such as ending the individual entitlement, it stops far short of the goals of welfare reform. The Specter-Biden substitute is $10 billion short on savings and short on time limits. It has an open-ended contingency fund. It does include, however, a liberalization on Medicaid benefits in which Medicaid could be extended to illegal aliens.

I would like to clarify that our legislation does include transitional Medicaid benefits for 1 year for those families leaving welfare. It also includes emergency Medicaid coverage for illegal aliens which is current law.

Mr. President, I urge defeat of the Specter-Biden amendment. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time for debate has elapsed. The question is on the motion to waive the Budget Act for consideration of amendment No. 4912.

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET ACT—AMENDMENT NO. 4914, AS MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question now occurs on amendment No. 4914 offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRIST]. There are 2 minutes for debate equally divided.

Mr. FRIST addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, this amendment, submitted on behalf of my colleagues Senators ABRAHAM, BOND, SANTORUM, HUTCHISON, and THOMPSON, simply asks for a sense of the Senate that the President ensure approval of the waiver requests of States such as Tennessee and 14 other States which have waiver requests before the Department of Health and Human Services.

On October 31, 1995, the President assured the Governors on that day that he would take care of these requests within 30 days. Mr. President, it has been 79 days for Tennessee. Others with waiver requests have been waiting as long as 2 years. Tennessee needs action. Michigan needs action.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. DODD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May we please have order in the Chamber so we can conclude these votes? Can we have order in the Chamber?

The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, it is with reluctance that I rise in opposition to this amendment, because of my respect and affection for the Senator from Tennessee. But, this amendment would allow for waivers across the board in 16 States without any idea of what is in these waivers.

I point out to my colleagues, that the administration has approved a record 67 waivers in 40 States. We've reduced welfare by 1.3 million people. The food stamp rolls are down. We are heading in the right direction.

Today, however, we are debating a national welfare reform program. That should be our focus. The sense-of-the-Senate resolution that would approve waivers to 16 States without any idea what is in those waivers, I think is wrong, with all due respect. We don't have any idea what sort of impact these waivers will have on children, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my colleague from Tennessee. I am uneasy about this amendment because it would express the sense of the Congress that 16 welfare waivers should be approved, without us knowing what those waivers propose to do.

The President already has approved a record 67 welfare reform waivers in 40 States. That's quite a record. Welfare caseloads are down by 1.3 million people, food stamp rolls are lower, and child support collections are up. So a lot of progress has been made in recent years, States are experimenting, and we're debating a national welfare reform bill. I think we'd all like to see the passage of a bipartisan welfare reform bill that puts people to work and protects children.

But this amendment asks us to give our approval to 16 different welfare plans without the benefit of knowing exactly what they propose to do. In my view, it should make us uneasy to approve 16 plans without knowing what the impact would be on the children in those States.

Mr. President, my understanding is that in one of the State waivers, the State asks to set a 5-year lifetime limit on welfare benefits that would begin in 1987. That's a retroactive time limit. If this is true, a mother who had been off assistance for the last 4 years, but lost her job by no fault of her own, would be told she could have no assistance at all. What would happen to her children? We don't know, because the details of the plan do not accompany the amendment before us today.

I understand that another waiver would terminate food stamp benefits if a mother does not comply with the work program. Now I know my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have argued that kids won't be hurt by welfare reform after the time limit, because food stamps are still there. Not under this sort of waiver as far as I can tell.

So Mr. President, I urge caution on this amendment. I also raise a point of order against the bill under the Byrd rule, section 313(b)(1)(A) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Budget Act, I move to waive the point of order against amendment No. 4914 to the bill. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

NOT VOTING—2

Nunn
Pryor

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question, there are 55 yeas, the nays are 43. Three-fifths of the Senators duly sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained, and the amendment falls.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Harkin amendment, which was next in line, be set aside and be reconsidered on Tuesday. He is in the process of negotiating. We did that for a Republican Senator.

The next order of business is Senator ASHCROFT, if this request is granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET ACT—AMENDMENT NO. 4917

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question now occurs on amendment No. 4917, offered by the Senators from Pennsylvania and Missouri. There are 2 minutes for debate equally divided.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I rise with an amendment that would allow States to require welfare recipients to bring up to date the immunizations of their minor children. Immunizations in America are free to individuals who are on welfare. Yet we have a number of children who are, every year, afflicted with serious disabling diseases which will persist into disabilities of their adulthood for lack of immunizations.

This amendment would simply provide States the authority, as it relates to programs which States share the cost of, and would require immunizations where the Federal Government funds the entirety of the welfare benefit. If you did not provide your children with the immunizations that were appropriate, you would have a 20-percent decrease until the children were properly immunized. This is in the interest of children.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I do not disagree with the thrust of what my colleague is saying, that parents should be responsible for immunizing their children. But I am afraid that we are aiming at the parents, but hurting the child. If the child is not fully immunized, to cut off that child from necessary food, medicine, or other resources is, I think, misguided.

We need to encourage and promote immunizations, but we do not want to simultaneously deny a child—through the fault of the parent who does not get the child fully immunized—the benefit of the necessary nutritional and medical services they would otherwise get. That is the effect of this amendment.

I respect my colleague's thrust, but do not penalize the child. The child would be the one to suffer. In cases where a child is behind in immunizations, that child could lose access to food and SSI for as long as a year while they catch up on their immunization schedule. Immunizations cannot be given all at once, I am told.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DODD. I am happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Is the Senator aware there is a 6-month grace period?

Mr. DODD. I respect that. My colleague knows, as well, that innocent children should not be penalized because their parents may be irresponsible. That is the net effect of this amendment.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Is the Senator aware this is just a 20-percent decrease in the benefit for the 6-month interval?

Mr. DODD. If it is a 5-percent decrease, why should an innocent child pay for the irresponsibility of a parent? That does not make sense. We ought to encourage immunizations, promote and do what we can. The 6-year-old or 2-year-old child whose parent is irresponsible should not be denied nutrition and adequate medical benefits.

I suggest, as well, the pending amendment is not germane. I rise to make a point of order that it violates section 305(b) of the Congressional Budget Act.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I move the point of order be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator request a rollcall?

Mr. ASHCROFT. I do request a rollcall vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

NOT VOTING—2

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYL). On this vote, the yeas are 58, the nays are 40. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn, not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained, and the amendment falls.

MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET ACT—AMENDMENT NO. 4918

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question occurs on the motion to waive the Budget Act for consideration of amendment No. 4918 by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE].

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, could I ask for order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 2 minutes of debate equally divided. The Senator from Minnesota would like to be heard.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I am not going to speak until I have order in the Chamber. I would like for my colleagues to please listen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would the Senators take their conversations to the cloakroom?

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I am going to wait until we have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I know there are Members anxious to leave. The vote will not occur until the Senate comes to order.

The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I would like to make a plea to my colleagues. Please err on the side of caution when we are dealing with the lives of poor children in America.

This amendment says that Health and Human Services studies this legislation and if, God forbid, there are provisions in this legislation that create more impoverished children, their report comes back to us at the end of 2 years and we take action—quick action—to modify these provisions so that we can correct the problem.

Democrats and Republicans: This is the right thing to do. We ought to evaluate the action that we are taking in this legislation. And God knows we ought to take the corrective action, if that is necessary, to make sure that we are not creating more poverty among children. This is the right thing to do. It is a fail-safe mechanism. It is a safety net built into the legislation.

I hope—I hope—every Democrat and Republican will support this. We must do this if we are to understand what this legislation means and be able to take corrective action, if necessary, to help poor children in America.

Please support this amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield time to Senator ROTH.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I oppose the Wellstone amendment. It is wholly unnecessary and unprecedented.

In regard to studying welfare reform, this amendment is wholly unnecessary. The legislation is filled with studies, evaluations and rankings of successful and unsuccessful States.

We absolutely want to know what works in welfare reform. But what is unacceptable and unprecedented is the rules given to the Secretary of HHS in sending recommendations to the Congress which must then be considered under expedited procedures in Congress.

Let me point out that there were about 11.7 million AFDC recipients in 1990. In 1993 the caseload exceeded 14 million for the first time. The caseload was over 14 million again in 1994. Last year HHS told the Congress that, if we do nothing, there will still be more children in poverty. That is under the current welfare system.

Again, we welcome the study. The legislation includes a study. But no Congress should yield its authority to a Cabinet Secretary for this or any other reason.

I urge defeat of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the Budget Act for consideration of amendment No. 4918. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 46, nays 50, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no other Senators wishing to vote, the yeas are 46, the nays are 50. Three-fifths of Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained. The amendment falls.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this next vote on the Graham amendment will be the last vote ordered today, which means there will be no additional rollcall votes. However, we are going to remain in session to take up amendments. If Senators want to offer amendments, they have to offer them either today or Monday. We are going to be here a few hours to take amendments. We are putting a list together, to try to make some sense of this afternoon. If we start on our side and go to your side, we would ask the D'Amato amendment on work be in order. Then you have one immediately following that?

Mr. EXON. I am certainly pleased to respond to my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. At the present time we have three Democratic amendments in this order: Following D'Amato would be Feinstein, then Conrad, and then Graham. There may be some others. I would simply say to my colleagues on this side, at the present time we have seven Republican amendments and three Democratic amendments. This afternoon would be an excellent time to offer your amendment. If you would come to us, any Democrat, we could schedule you right after the Graham amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have some others to put in order, but I will do it after the vote.

AMENDMENT NO. 4921

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question occurs on the motion to table amendment No. 4921 offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM]. The yeas and nays have been ordered. Under the previous order, there will be 2 minutes of discussion equally divided.

The Senate will come to order.

The Chair was in error. The vote is not on the motion to table. This is an up-or-down vote on amendment No. 4921, offered by the Senator from Florida, who will be recognized as soon as the Senate comes to order.

The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the issue presented by this motion to strike is a simple one. We have already spent weeks debating the issue of the benefits for legal aliens—legal aliens. On May 2, we passed a comprehensive immigration bill which outlined the restraints that we felt were appropriate. We are now coming, today, to essentially trash all of that work that we have done by developing an entirely new set of principles as it relates to the eligibility of legal aliens, a new set of principles that have gone unstudied and unexamined, but represent some very significant policy shifts. It moves away from the principle of restraining benefits by looking to the sponsor to pay for the benefits of the legal alien, and it represents outright bars to legal aliens, from political refugees and asylees, as well as those who came in with a sponsor. It substantially increases the shift of responsibility to local governments.

Mr. President, we have already dealt with this issue. We should let the immigration conference come to closure and not impose a new set of unexamined, duplicative, and I consider inappropriate policies. It should now be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the time we have to Senator SIMPSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, this will cost $16 billion. Our Nation's immigration law is very clear on one point. No one may immigrate to the United States of America if he or she is likely at any time to become a public charge. And the American public expects the newcomers will work and receive any needed support from the relatives who brought them here. Period. That is the law.

There is considerable evidence that this promise of self-sufficiency is not being honored. That is why in the other bill we enforce the affidavit of sponsorship. The welfare reform bill contains provisions which ensure that immigrants are self-sufficient. The bill shifts the welfare costs from the American taxpayers onto those who sponsor their immigrant relatives to the country. The immigration bill is in conference. It is not in peril. We have resolved 150 items of the Senate issues, 120 House issues. We have three significant issues yet to be resolved. But these provisions on immigrant welfare are important. We cannot afford to have these reforms delayed, and the Graham amendment would do just that. The simple premise: Sponsor brings the immigrant, sponsor promises to pay, sponsor pays before the taxpayer pays.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, since 1882 Federal law has provided that probability of becoming a public charge is ground for immigrants' exclusion from the United States. Additionally, becoming a public charge which a noncitizen is currently a deportable offense.

According to the Census Bureau, there were 23 million foreign-born persons in the United States in 1994, representing 9 percent of the population. That is the highest level in the last 50 years.

Aliens over 65 are 5 times more likely to be on SSI than citizens over 65, making the program a retirement plan for elderly noncitizens. SSI applications by noncitizens grew 370 percent from 1982 to 1992 versus 39 percent for citizens.

Without reform, over 2 million noncitizens will continue collecting guaranteed cash welfare, health care, and food benefits, costing taxpayers more than $20 billion over 6 years.

In this legislation, sponsors, not taxpayers, are held responsible for supporting noncitizens because sponsor agreements are made legally binding documents. Deeming is expanded to apply to most Federal programs. Both deeming and sponsorship continue until the alien becomes a citizen, unless the noncitizen has worked for at least 10 years.

Most nonncitizens who arrive after the date of enactment would not be eligible for most Federal welfare benefits during their first 5 years in the United States.

Refugees and veterans and their families and emergency medical services are excepted.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, most immigrants are hard working, and committed to self-sufficiency. Unfortunately, others have become dependent on a variety of Government benefits. The Personal Responsibility, Work Opportunity, and Medicaid Restructuring Act of 1996 addresses this issue by limiting the eligibility of qualified aliens for certain Federal benefits, including SSI and food stamps. In addition, the legislation grants State authority to limit the eligibility of qualified aliens to certain State public benefits.

My colleagues, Senator GRAHAM, has offered an amendment which would remove these provisions from the bill. While I cannot support this amendment because it undermines the principle that individuals who immigrate to this Nation should be self-sufficient, I believe that the amendment is important because it draws attention to the plight of those hard-working immigrants who may need assistance as a result of events which are beyond their control. Therefore, I strongly recommend that the conference committee consider the needs of those immigrants who are committed to self-sufficiency but who are in need through no fault of their own.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this will cost the taxpayers $16 billion.

I move to table the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table amendment No. 4921.

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR] are necessarily absent.

NOT VOTING—4

Mr. BROWN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 60 seconds as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

RATIFICATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL RUBBER AGREEMENT

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, as a Member of the Senate, I have seldom used the opportunity to put holds on bills. It has been a very rare occasion, but I have in the past few weeks put a hold on the ratification of the International Rubber Agreement. It is an outrage to consumers and an outrage to free enterprise.

It is not my practice to have this issue decided by a hold, and I recognize the need for the Senate to have an opportunity for all Members to go on record on that issue. My intention is to try to get comments from the Attorney General with regard to its antitrust implications, and once those comments are back, to allow it to come to the floor for a full vote. If, indeed, the Attorney General does not respond to our inquiries, I will withdraw the hold in any case in early September so that the Senate can work its will on that issue.

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY, WORK OPPORTUNITY, AND MEDICAID RESTRUCTURING ACT OF 1996

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

Pursuant to the order, we have not decided how long we will be here, but I think it will work out because of Senators agreeing to take their amendments up today. We will not be here late. Here is what I know to this point. I say to the Senator, we are going to try to go back and forth. Senator D'AMATO's amendment has been agreed to as being the next in order. I ask Senator D'AMATO if he will agree to a time limit?

Mr. D'AMATO. Fifteen minutes, twenty minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. How about 15 minutes on a side for Senator D'AMATO?

Mr. EXON. I have no instructions on this side.

We will agree to the 15 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Thirty minutes equally divided on Senator D'AMATO's amendment. Senator FEINSTEIN has an immigration amendment. Let me make a unanimous consent request on her behalf. Senator FEINSTEIN had an amendment called "work requirement" on our previous consolidated finite list of amendments. She has asked if she could substitute, for that work requirement, an immigration amendment that has to do with prospective application of the alien law in this bill.

So I ask unanimous consent that it be in order that she substitute that measure for the one that she had previously listed as reserved. That means she will not take up the previously reserved one. It will be gone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Would the Senator agree to a half-hour equally divided?

Mr. EXON. I talked to Senator FEINSTEIN about this. She wants to reserve the full 1 hour. Hopefully, we can cut that down, but she has others who want to speak. So at least we have agreed to have a half-hour equally divided on D'Amato. We would have to insist on 2 hours equally divided. Maybe that can be cut down on the Feinstein-Boxer amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Well, then, just a moment. Does the Senator have an early departure time?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. The cosponsor of the amendment, Senator BOXER, does.

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to the Senator, we have a number of Senators who would like to go in a short period of time and not take very long. I am wondering if we might try to get a couple of those in at 30 minutes, and then come back to the Senator for the full time.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield? I say to my senior Senator, I think we should agree to an hour equally divided. I only need 10 minutes, giving the Senator 20 minutes. I think that Senator DOMENICI has been very gracious to us. I am willing to cut mine back even further to 5 or 6 minutes, if you needed more time than that.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, if I might address the Chairman, I will do my level best and will agree to the half hour, with the proviso that if there is something I need to respond to, I have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. DOMENICI. We will see if we can do it that way.

Mr. President, an hour equally divided on the Feinstein amendment.

Senator CHAFEE, you are next. How much would you desire?

Mr. CHAFEE. Half hour equally divided.

Mr. DOMENICI. Any objection to a half hour equally divided?

Mr. EXON. No objection here.

Mr. DOMENICI. Following that is a food stamp block grant amendment by Senator CONRAD.

Mr. EXON. We have no instructions on that at the present time. I told him he would be later. I cannot agree to that at this time. We will check with Senator CONRAD in a few moments and let you know.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will move ahead. I have one on behalf of Senator GRAMM. It will take exactly 1 minute on my side. Could you agree to a limited time on that amendment?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I heard some reference to the Conrad amendment, which I want to speak about for 2 minutes at some point. I will do it at any time.

Mr. EXON. I think we can agree to a shortened time on Gramm, but I will check on that.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think we will waste more time this way than if we just proceed. Let me stop with the Chafee amendment as a request on time limits, and just indicate the order, thereafter, without time agreements.

Mr. EXON. Right.

Mr. DOMENICI. Following Chafee, we agreed that Senator CONRAD's amendment would be the next order of business on food stamps. Following that would be a Gramm amendment—I am supposed to offer that—on drugs. If I am not here, Senator SANTORUM will do that. Following that will be Graham-Bumpers on funding formula. That would be the sixth amendment, if they are looking at when they would come up today. Following that is a Democratic amendment.

Mr. EXON. We do not have anything after Graham-Bumpers at this juncture. It does not mean we may not have more, but we cannot make agreement on something we do not have on the list.

Mr. DOMENICI. After the Graham-Bumpers funding formula, we would put in the order, Helms on food stamps, to be followed by a Democratic amendment, if they come up with one, to be followed by a Shelby amendment, to be followed by a Democratic amendment, if they come up with one, to be followed by an Ashcroft amendment. That is all we have on our side.

I ask that be the order for this afternoon.

Mr. EXON. Have you placed Shelby above Pressler in your list?

Mr. DOMENICI. We are working to clear Pressler.

Mr. EXON. OK. Is it proper to say Pressler, then Shelby?

Mr. DOMENICI. Correct. Then you have one and we have Ashcroft.

If there are no Democratic amendments, the Republican amendments will be taken in that order.

Mr. EXON. I will get back with you on Senators GRAHAM and CONRAD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair considers that a proposed order, and there is no unanimous consent request propounded yet.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order announced as agreed upon be the order of business for the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 4927

(Purpose: To require welfare recipients to participate in gainful community service)

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], for himself, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. GRAMM, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. FAIRCLOTH, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. BURNS, Mr. SMITH, Mr. COVERDELL, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. ASHCROFT, Mr. BROWN, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. BOND, Mr. GRAMS, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. MACK, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. LOTT, and Mr. NICKLES, proposes an amendment numbered 4927.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Section 402(a)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 2103(a)(1), is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(iii) Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, unless the State opts out of this provision by notifying the Secretary, a State shall, consistent with the exception provided in section 407(e)(2), require a parent or caretaker receiving assistance under the program who, after receiving such assistance for two months is not exempt from work requirements and is not engaged in work, as determined under section 407(c), to participate in community service employment, with minimum hours per week and tasks to be determined by the State."

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself and 24 other colleagues, 24 Senators, who join with me in saying we should really end welfare as we know it. That is something that President Clinton has spoken about and has been a concern of the American people, a bona fide concern. It is a concern of even welfare recipients themselves, who tell us time and time again in a unifying voice, "Reform this system, change this system; the system entraps us; it does not give us hope; it does not give us opportunities."

What this amendment does, it goes right to the core of one of the great problems. That is, seeing to it that able-bodied recipients who have, in some cases, become trapped in the welfare syndrome be given an opportunity for work experience, to become self-sustaining, so they can feel part of this great country, that they can experience pride in work, so that even those, Mr. President, who do not have a job, under this amendment will have the opportunity to participate and to feel they are earning their way in their community.

What this amendment does, it says a State can require able-bodied recipients to take community service in lieu of a job, where there is no job, where they are not involved in a job-training program. Why should we have to wait 2 years, have a recipient on welfare for 2 years, before we say to them, "You should report to a community service project, work at a hospital, work in the park, work helping to clean the highways"? We are talking about able-bodied recipients.

Let me make clear this in no way will impinge upon that single parent who is the custodian of a child. Understand that. Indeed, there is a specific exemption which indicates that if there is a custodial parent caring for a child under the age of 11, that adult can demonstrate an inability to obtain needed child care, then they are relieved of this burden.

Let me also point out that many, many middle-class Americans, working middle-class families, have single-parent moms who are working. They begin to see, by the way, "Am I a second-class citizen? I go to work. I support one, two, three children." We have millions of Americans today, moms and dads, who leave the house every day, they have children. They go to work.

What we are saying here is really very, very modest. We are saying, "Look, you are on welfare. You are receiving benefits. At the end of 2 months, you take community service. You can participate." If there is no job available in the private sector, let that person help his or her community. Everybody gains self-respect, dignity. I am tired of hearing we want to change the welfare system as we know it and then not do much about it.

Yesterday I spoke about a great American who had more empathy for poor people, immigrants, for people who needed help and opportunity and training, and who did more in establishing hope and opportunities. I speak to my parents, and my dad tells me during the Depression days, what the WPA, the Works Progress Administration, what it meant and how it gave people an opportunity for dignity. Young people had a job and could report to work and help build the highways and schools, et cetera. It was a form of community service. It really was. It gave people that self-fulfillment.

When Franklin Delano Roosevelt, one of the great architects of trying to give people the ability to lift themselves out of poverty, certainly a figure that working poor people looked to for hope during the most terrible times, when he gave us an admonition and warned of the evils of entrapping people in a welfare system, his words should take on meaning. Forget about someone running for office today, a Democrat or Republican, someone in the Congress or someone who wants to get here. Look at someone who said, "If people stay on welfare for a prolonged period of time, it administers a narcotic to their spirit." That is President Roosevelt. "If people stay on welfare for a prolonged period of time," he said, "it administers a narcotic to their spirit."

He went on to say that "this dependence on welfare"—listen to this—"this dependence on welfare undermines their humanity, makes them wards of the State, and takes away their chance at America." How prophetic. How prophetic, because here we are 50 years later, and what have we seen? We have seen the decline of the human spirit—the decline of it. Now we have a system where people figure out how they can beat the system, bring people here, put them on the welfare rolls, and how they feel good about beating the system. By the way, if a State does not want to do this, it can opt out. By gosh, it is about time we said, hey, after 2 months on welfare, if you are able-bodied and if you do not have a job, you are not in job training, you report for community service. If you do not want to do that, you are off the rolls. If you do not want to help yourself and be part of this process of earning one's way and contributing either to your benefit or to the benefit of a community that is helping you because you do not have a job, why, then, that community has no longer a responsibility and obligation. Indeed, we are doing something that President Roosevelt warned us about. We are entrapping those people; we are destroying their dignity, destroying the human spirit, destroying their opportunity of understanding the greatness of a free capital system where people work and are rewarded on the basis of their ability.

This amendment was adopted unanimously last year. It was offered by Senator Dole. I proudly offer it on behalf of Senator Dole again, in the spirit of overcoming adversity and giving people hope and opportunity and ending that dependency that acts as a narcotic and seduces the best in people. That is what it has done for far too long.

So I hope that we can pass this unanimously. Again, I say Senator Dole offered this last year. I am proud to offer it on behalf of my 24 colleagues. I daresay that this should pass unanimously this time. I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be added as an original cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, yesterday, I was on the floor when the Senator gave his speech with reference to the whole problem of welfare. I commend him for it. Today, I commend him for his remarks and for the amendment he has offered. I believe there is a great deal of concern out there about whether there will be enough private sector jobs. I think what we are saying is, you know, it is not just the private sector job we are looking for, we are looking for a change in the behavioral pattern of people on welfare.

This is a very good test. If, after a couple of months on welfare, the State finds or the locality finds community service-type jobs, the point of it is that you have to get up, go to work, sign in, do what you are supposed to do, which is part of getting you ready, it seems to me, if you have had less of an opportunistic life and have not had a chance. I see it as part of the new weave that may very well yield a different kind of tapestry in terms of a life for people who are on welfare. I hope it passes and is retained in conference.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I yield back any remaining time on my amendment.

Mr. EXON. We yield back our time.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote on the D'Amato amendment will occur on Tuesday, with 1 minute for debate before the vote.

AMENDMENT NO. 4928

(Purpose: To increase the number of adults and to extend the period of time in which educational training activities may be counted as work)

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, this has been cleared with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON], for Mr. SIMON, for himself, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. KERREY, Mr. SPECTER, and Mr. JEFFORDS, proposes an amendment numbered 4928.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I would like to thank the chairman of the committee for the opportunity to offer this amendment. This amendment is on behalf of Senators BOXER, GRAHAM, and myself.

AMENDMENT NO. 4929

(Purpose: This amendment provides that the ban on SSI apply to those entering the country on or after the enactment of this bill and exists until citizenship)

Mr. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mrs. FEINSTEIN], for herself, Mrs. BOXER, and Mr. GRAHAM, proposes an amendment numbered 4929.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, Senator GRAHAM offered an amendment which deals with the receiving of benefits by people who are newcomers to this country but here in a legal status as legal aliens. This amendment relates to that amendment. It provides that the ban on public benefits for newcomers to this country become effective September 1 of this year and last until they become citizens of this country, which can take place in 5 years. In essence, what we would do is take the provision of the bill which effectively prevents and throws off of any benefit program people in this country legally and we would make that prospective.

I do this as a Californian. This bill and this amendment has an enormous impact on California, and I want to say why.

Presently, in California, are 52.4 percent of all of the legal immigrants in the country on SSI. Fifty-two percent of all the legal immigrants in the country on SSI, aged, blind and disabled, are in the State of California.

This bill is where a good deal of the savings are gathered, whether the savings are $16 or $18 billion, clearly, 52 percent of those savings comes from California. I am here with my colleague, Senator BOXER, to tell you that 1 million people—bigger than the population of many States—on the date this bill becomes effective will be thrown OFF of AFDC, will be thrown off of SSI immediately. This includes in my city, San Francisco, very elderly and very senior Russian immigrants.

I remember watching a woman walk down Grant Avenue, she happened to be Chinese. She was so hunched over, she could barely walk. She is on SSI. She is a legal immigrant to this country. She would be summarily thrown off of SSI.

I happen to agree with something Albert Schweitzer once said: How you treat the least among us is a test of our civilization. Yet, I understand the need to make the changes. The costs have become so great and people are hesitant to pay these costs through their taxes. Therefore, what do you do?

Do you throw people off into the streets without no source of support, or do you send a message to the world and say: henceforth, when you come to this country as a newcomer, know that for the time you are not a citizen, you will not be able receive any of these benefits; know that before you come; know that your children will not be eligible for AFDC; the grandmothers will not be eligible for SSI or health benefits—know that before you come, the term on which you are coming to this country.

I think that is a fair judgment to make, to send that message. But, I think it is an unfair judgment, and possibly a very difficult judgment. It is easy to come up to this Chamber and come up to the desk and cast that aye vote. It is not going to be so easy when you see that crippled woman, whether she be Hispanic, or whether she be Chinese, Russian, African, or any other newcomer, white too, unable to survive, unable to participate in a program like Self-help for the Elderly or Unlock in My City, which deals with Chinese elderly newcomers to a great extent. I think that is a real dilemma in this bill.

Let me talk about what it does in California. It is estimated by the State and by the Department of Health and Human Services that the loss for California is anywhere from $7 billion over the period of this bill to $9 billion. The 20 highest-loss metropolitan areas are: No. 1, Los Angeles and Long Beach; then San Jose, Stockton, Anaheim, Santa Ana, Fresno, Modesto, San Francisco, San Diego, Sacramento, Oxnard, Ventura, Santa Barbara, and Lompoc. Those are the areas that are impacted with the largest numbers.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY

This measure is an unfunded mandate, essentially, on Los Angeles County. Its numbers and costs are a huge transfer of funds. Los Angeles County does not have the right to say "OK, we have canceled SSI and your AFDC, so go home." People will still be there. If they can't walk down the street, if they are senile, if they are blind, if they are totally disabled, they will have no recourse but to fund them.

Let's take a look at how many people are involved in Los Angeles County, and what this transfer of cost is in the largest county in the United States.

This will immediately, in this county alone throw off of SSI 93,000 people who are aged, who are blind and who are disabled. The transfer to the county is $236 million this year and every year. It will throw off of AFDC 190,313 families. On the Medicaid provisions alone, the cost to the county is $100 million. So, the cost to Los Angeles County per year in just basic, preliminary estimates in terms of what would end up being a transfer is $336 million a year. I am told from some this could create a situation of bankruptcy for the county.

Is this really what we want to do? Some say welfare reform is a battle for the soul. Some say it is a battle for the heart. I really think it is a battle for the future. I understand the need to save costs, but I also understand that truly how we treat the least among us is the ultimate test of this Nation.

I would submit to you that, yes, if this amendment passes, we will reduce the savings of the bill. I would also submit to you that unless we do this, in the largest State in the Union, in 2 or 3 years, we are going to see an absolute picture of devastation.

Forty percent of the Federal funding losses over the 6 years come from California. The bill, the way it stands, is estimated to cost $7 billion to $9 billion, nearly a million people are effected in the State of California, and in Los Angeles County alone, the estimate is 400,000 to 500,000 people impacted unless this amendment passes.

My statement to this body is, in essence, "you could establish your principle, your public policy, which is, after all, what this body is all about, without actually harming and hurting people now who are deserving, whose total ability to live and exist in this country depends on their ability to receive SSI, or their ability to receive AFDC, or their ability to receive the medical care that they are covered to get under the law today. In essence, we change the law midstream on the most vulnerable people and are in this country legally.

I have a real problem with that. I would think anybody looking at this bill would have a real problem with that, at least I would hope they would. Come to Chinatown in San Francisco, for example, and stand on a corner for an hour and watch the elderly go by. Take 52 percent of all of them that you see and know that they are SSI, and know that tomorrow or September 1, they won't be. That is what this bill does. It has a very profound implication for California.

That is why Senator BOXER and I stand here today, and why Senator GRAHAM has tried to move the amendment he did and now supports our amendment. I would submit to you that the big States, the growth States, are going to have the biggest impact.

I would submit to you that they will be: California, on a tier all by itself; certainly Florida; certainly Texas; certainly New York; certainly Illinois; and certainly to an extent New Jersey. These are the big States that will be affected by this bill.

I know the votes are here to defeat the amendment.

The ultimate test of a civilization is how we treat the least among us. It is one thing to change the rules ahead, so everybody knows what rules we as a country play by, and both Senator BOXER and I are willing to do that. It is another thing to say, when you have no other means of subsistence, "we are going to change the rules on you today."

I yield 10 minutes of my time to Senator BOXER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California, Mrs. BOXER.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the Chair.

I thank the senior Senator from California [Mrs. FEINSTEIN] for her work and the staff work on this excellent amendment. Both Senators from California have been, shall we say, very upset about the impact of this bill on our great, wonderful, and beautiful State. We have been talking for several days about what approach we can take to keep with the principle of welfare reform but to make sure we do not change these rules in the middle of the game so that innocent children, innocent families, even refugees who come here without a sponsor but to escape persecution, are not thrown out on the street.

I was discussing this with a friend of mine who said, "Well, they will be taken care of. Someone is going to take care of them." I said that I used to be a county supervisor, and I know that we have the general assistance program, and we are required to take care of those who are completely destitute. Where are the counties going to get the funds to do this? This friend of mine said, "Well, maybe they will just change the law, and they won't have to do it anymore."

My friends, we need welfare reform. The system does not work. It is broken. The senior Senator and I want to fix it. We want to put work first. We also want to make sure that the most vulnerable, as she has stated, are protected. It is perhaps easy to sit in this beautiful Chamber, in all the luxury of this beautiful Chamber, far away from the problem, and vote to say we are cutting off legal immigrants. It is easy to say it. I understand that. It is politically popular to say it.

I remind my friends that we are talking about people who are here legally, who waited their turn to come here. We are talking about refugees, people who sought asylum. And we are changing the rules. This bill will harm them even if they are blind, even if they are helpless, even if they are children. I think what Senator FEINSTEIN has crafted in her amendment goes a long way to resolving this issue. The amendment would say to those who are here legally, you came knowing the rules and we will keep you under those rules. However, let the word go out across the world that times are changing. America is changing the rules, and if you come here after September of this year, you will no longer have those same benefits. The senior Senator from California and I believe this is eminently fair. It does no damage to the thrust of the underlying bill.

As Senator FEINSTEIN has pointed out, our State of California is going to get hit with a tremendous unfunded mandate. With well over $50 billion of savings in this bill, we know that over a third of those savings come from legal immigrant cutbacks—40 percent of which will come from our great State of California. That simply is not fair. We are talking about a loss of $7 to $9 billion to California alone.

This is an Earth-shattering bill we are considering. This is a bill that will bring much needed change to the welfare system. It is putting work first. It is changing in many ways the social contract in this country. It is putting responsibility on the shoulders of many people in this country.

I think it is a very important bill, and I very much want to support it, but I have to say, how can we be proud to vote for a bill that would take a blind, elderly woman with no other means of support and throw her out on the street? How can we be proud of a bill that takes children and puts them out on the street?

Today, there are an estimated 4 million legal immigrant children in this country. Some of them will be harmed if the Feinstein-Boxer amendment is not adopted. Out of those 4 million legal immigrant children, about 1.5 million live in the State of California. How can we stand here and say that we care about children and yet in the same breath vote for a bill that could cause harm to scores of legal immigrant children? It is hard for me to comprehend that.

Senator FEINSTEIN and I have heard from our counties and cities all over the State. She has listed for you in descending order the cities and counties that would be affected the most. I had an opportunity to speak with one of Los Angeles' County supervisors, Zev Yeroslavsky. He provided me with information which shows what would happen to Los Angeles. This bill could be cataclysmic for that city. Again, it is easy to say let the counties worry about it. But I thought this body decided we would not put unfunded mandates on local governments. And yet that is what we are doing.

I have to say this. Last night, the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SANTORUM], got into a debate about just what happens to legal immigrants in this country. The Senator from Pennsylvania made an eloquent statement that this bill does not adversely impact refugees. He said we are true to the American principle of give us your tired and your poor. If you escape from your country and you come here, we take you in. I was very moved by that eloquence, and then learned, as Senator GRAHAM pointed out, in a copy of the most recent bill, refugees would also be cut off 5 years after they entered.

The Feinstein amendment would say we are going to make these changes, but we are going to make them prospectively, from September of this year forward.

I cannot imagine that we would knowingly hurt the most vulnerable in our society—who are here legally—by immediately changing the rules. By immediately telling the aged, blind, and disabled, with the most severely disabling diseases and conditions, that they are thrown out. And to tell the counties that this is your problem.

I just remember those days when I was a county supervisor, and a little child came before me with her family and looked into my eyes and the eyes of my colleagues. We, two Democrats and three Republicans on that board, would never turn people away.

That would be a violation of every ethic—be it religious, moral, ethical, or governmental. Yet, without the Feinstein-Boxer amendment, which is also supported by Senator GRAHAM, that is exactly what we will do. We will force an unfunded mandate on the local governments. We will hurt the most vulnerable in our society. We are changing the rules in the middle of the game.

If we support this amendment, which I think is a fine amendment, it does no harm at all to the premise of this bill. It just means that we phase-in some of the more restrictive aspects of this bill.

I urge my colleagues—indeed, I implore my colleagues—think about what you are doing. Because if this goes forward and we see the most vulnerable people on the streets of our cities and our counties and we see our counties without the means to handle it, we will be very sorry, indeed, that we went forward. The Feinstein-Boxer-Graham amendment gives us the opportunity to phase-in all of this.

Again, I thank my colleague. I urge support for the amendment, and I yield back the time to my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, how much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from California has 7 minutes exactly.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Just one thought for this body. Take the most conservative cost for California, $7 billion; 7-year bill, $1 billion a year, most of it coming from Los Angeles County, let us say $500 million a year. California is a proposition 13 State. This all has to come from general assistance. General assistance is locally funded. Los Angeles cannot raise its property tax rate under proposition 13.

How does the county fund it? The county cannot fund it. This will force, if the county is to fund it—this will force the reduction of other county programs. It could be the sheriff, it could be the jail. There is no way around it. The dollars are too big.

The distinguished chairman of the committee indicated that the savings, by taking all legal immigrants off of all benefits, is $18 billion. What we are telling you is we know 52 percent of this comes from California. Therefore, if California is a prop 13 State and it presses the local jurisdictions and they are funded by property taxes and they cannot raise their property taxes and they cannot say "legal immigrants, leave the country and go home," it is a real catch-22 for the local government.

If I might, just quickly, ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter dated July 17 from the Democratic floor leader of the California Assembly and President pro tempore of the California Senate; and a memorandum from the California State Association of Counties.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE,
STATE CAPITOL,
Sacramento, CA, July 17, 1996.

Hon. DIANNE FEINSTEIN,
U.S. Senator, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN: We write to convey major concerns raised by the most recent proposed welfare reform legislation currently being considered by Congress.

SERVICES FOR AGED AND DISABLED LEGAL IMMIGRANTS

Denying federal benefits to legal immigrants disproportionately harms California communities. Over 230,000 non-citizen legal immigrants currently receive SSI in California, excluding refugees. This aid is provided to the aged, blind and disabled, who could not support themselves by going to work if their SSI benefits ended. Under HR 3507, SSI and Food Stamps would be denied to noncitizens already legally residing in California as well as to new legal entrants unlike the immigration reform legislation currently under consideration in Congress, which permits continued benefits for existing legal residents.

The proposed bar on SSI and Food Stamps for all legal immigrants, and the denial of other federal means-tested programs to new legal entrants for their first five years in the country would have a devastating effect on California's counties, which are obligated to be the providers of last resort. It is estimated that these proposed changes would result in costs of $9 billion to California's counties over a seven-year period. At a minimum, the very elderly, those too disabled to become citizens and those who become disabled after they arrive in this country should be exempted from the prohibition on SSI—if for no other reason than to lessen to counties the indefensible cost of shifting care from the federal government to local taxpayers for a needy population admitted under U.S. immigration laws.

PROTECTION FOR CHILDREN

While we agree that welfare dependence should not be encouraged as a way of life, it is essential in setting time limits on aid that adequate protections be provided for children once parents hit these time limits. Some provision must be made for vouchers or some other mechanism by which the essential survival needs of children such as food can be met. The Administration has suggested this sort of approach as a means of ensuring adequate protection for children whose parents hit time limits on aid.

California's child poverty rate was 27 percent for 1992 through 1994, substantially above the national rate of 21 percent. HR 4, which was vetoed by the President, would have caused an additional 1.5 million children to become poor. Though estimates have not been produced for HR 3507, it is likely that it also would result in a significant additional number of children falling below the poverty level.

ADEQUATE FUNDING FOR CHILD CARE

Funds provided for child care are essential to meet the needs of parents entering the work force while on aid and leaving aid as their earnings increase. For California to meet required participation rates, about 400,000 parents would have to enter the work force and an additional 100,000 would have to increase their hours of work. Even if only 15 percent of these parents need a paid, formal child care arrangement, California will need nearly $300 million per year in new child care funds.

Thank you for your consideration of these concerns. If your staff have any questions about these issues, they can contact Tim Gage, at (916) 324-0341.

Sincerely,

BILL LOCKYER,
President pro tempore, California Senate.

Re Welfare reform legislation.

I am writing once again to bring to your attention a very important issue involving the impact of the welfare reform bill on local government. As I understand it, the Congress plans to submit a new welfare reform bill to the President that does not contain Medicaid reform. However, the bill will still contain measures which pose serious and substantial cost shifts to local government including drastic health care costs.

The measures, H.R. 3507 and S. 1795, propose to eliminate SSI and food stamps to legal immigrants including those already legally residing in California. In addition, it would eliminate future immigrants from eligibility for 50 to 80 federal programs for five years and disqualifies those same immigrants from these programs until citizenship. The fiscal effect of these provisions would be to drain $23 billion of federal money nationwide from major welfare programs over seven years. California, which is home to the largest number of noncitizen legal immigrants in the country would lose at least $9 billion over seven years.

Once legal immigrants are no longer eligible for federal social service programs, California's 58 counties will still be responsible for providing social services and medical care to them. A recent study issued by the University of California at Los Angeles indicates that an estimated 830,000 immigrants would converge onto county health programs if changes are made at the federal level to exclude them from health coverage. The counties in California are legally and fiscally responsible under state law to provide a "safety net" to indigent persons in the form of cash aid and health care. Currently, local governments are bursting at the seams from the impact of these programs.

Changes of this magnitude at the federal level could cause many counties to meet the same fate as Orange County did two years ago when it declared bankruptcy. Counties are already struggling financially as year after year they have been forced to absorb reductions in payments because of local, state and federal budget difficulties. We cannot now absorb these costs as well. We strongly urge you to consider your vote on these very important pieces of legislation and the long-range impact they will have on local government once the publicity is over. We would request that you do not support these measures should they contain these faulty policies which would merely shift the cost and responsibility to the counties.

There are additional concerns that we have with the proposal and Margaret Peña of my staff is available to discuss them with you. She can be reached at (916) 327-7523. Thank you for your consideration.

Re Welfare bills pending before the House and Senate floor—the California impact of the immigrant provisions.

Attached, as you requested are:

1. A letter from the California State Association of Counties on this issue.
2. A one-pager prepared by the National Immigration Law Center on the current welfare bills.
3. A 2-pager on the California impact. I put this together, based largely on materials prepared by NILC. It is being refined—let me know if anything is unclear.

Please do not hesitate to call me at 243-8215, extension 319, if you have any questions or need additional information. Please inform us of the Senator's position on any or all of these issues as soon as you can. Thank you for your interest.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, how much of my time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 4 minutes and 46 seconds.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this is certainly an issue of dollars. It is certainly an issue of impact on local institutions required to provide services. But it is also fundamentally an issue of fairness, fairness in many dimensions. Let me just mention two.

One of those is the fact that very few of these local communities requested the circumstance in which they find themselves. Immigrants, legal and illegal, come into this country for a variety of reasons but virtually none of them come in because they receive an invitation from a particular community. It is Federal policy that determines who can come legally. It is Federal willingness to allocate resources that will determine whether we can enforce the immigration laws that we have enacted or will we be faced with floodtides of illegal immigration. Unfortunately, my State, as does California, peculiarly has to deal with this issue. We have had hundreds of thousands of immigrants in all categories, from refugees to parolees to asylees to special categories of entrants, come into our State, as well as those who have come through the normal immigration process. All those decisions are made by those of us who are privileged to be Federal officials.

The consequences of those decisions almost always fall at a local level: At a hospital attempting to cope with overwhelming numbers of persons seeking medical assistance; at an educational institution, a school that is overcrowded because of the large surge of immigrant children—the social institutions. My State was so overwhelmed that we went to Federal court with a request, under litigation, that we be compensated for the expenses the State had paid on behalf of those persons who came to the United States as a result of Federal action.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled on that case just a few weeks ago. Unfortunately for the State of Florida, the ruling was: You may have a good case. You may have a strong moral basis for your litigation. But it is not a justiciable case before the Federal courts. You have to find your relief through the political processes, not through the judicial processes. That is what we are about today. Fundamental fairness in terms of the Federal Government assuming its appropriate responsibility for the financial cost of the immigration decisions that it has made.

There is a second issue of fairness and that is as it relates to the individual affected. These people who came here under the current immigration law did so under a set of standards and expectations that did not include that they were going to have their benefits peremptorily terminated. If this is a good idea to have in effect today, we should have done it 10 or 20 years ago.

I think it is fundamentally unfair to have these people in the country under the rules that have applied—we are dealing, here, with legal aliens, people who pay the same taxes we do and are subject to the same responsibilities; but now, at the last moment, we are going to say you are not going to get the same benefits. I think that is unfair. The amendment that has been offered by the Senators from California would relieve us from that unfairness. I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 4 minutes of the Senator has expired. The Senator from California has 26 seconds remaining.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I yield to the other side and request I be allowed to reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, this is a debate that is virtually identical to the debate we engaged in last night at a rather late hour with the Senator from Florida on his amendment. His amendment removes all the provisions dealing with legal immigrants from the bill, for current participants in the welfare system and future participants in the welfare system. What the Feinstein amendment does is simply makes the provisions in the bill prospective but grandfathers in everybody who is in the system. The Graham amendment, to my understanding, was going to reduce the savings in the budget by somewhere from $16 to $18 billion. My understanding is the Feinstein amendment reduces the savings in the reconciliation bill from $10 to $12 billion. It is still a dramatic revenue loss. As was in the case of the Graham bill, in the Feinstein bill there are no offsets. This is just a reduction in savings, going to pay for legal immigrants to continue to receive welfare benefits.

Let me, for the benefit of those who were not up at 11:30 last night listening to this debate, go through how the underlying bill works and, in fact, a little bit of the history of the underlying provisions in this act, the underlying bill. What is in this legislation before us are provisions that were passed in H.R. 4 last year and passed both the House and Senate. They were in the Senate bill that passed the Senate last year 87 to 12. They are in the Democratic substitute, which I believe—I might be wrong—the Members who are debating this amendment and advocating this amendment voted for. The Daschle substitute has this identical provision in the bill, the same provision as the Republican bill.

What the Senators from California and Florida are attempting to do is to remove what has passed the Congress once, what has passed this Senate twice, what has been included in both Democratic and Republican bills.

I suggest this has been a fairly well-tested provision. It is clear the vast majority of the Members of this Senate believe that we have been too generous with legal immigrants coming into this country, and I will explain why they feel that way.

In fact, the Graham amendment today was tabled; in other words, defeated, on a motion of 62 to 34. So this is not, frankly, even a partisan issue, as you see. It has very strong bipartisan support.

Let me explain what the underlying bill does, what the Feinstein amendment is attempting to change. What we do in this bill is recognize that there are various classes of immigrants.

For purposes of simplification, we will talk about three major classes of immigrants. One is what are called refugees. These are people who come to this country who are seeking refuge from political persecution or other kinds of persecution in a foreign country, and they come to our shores seeking help and refuge in the United States.

What we say to those people, as the Senator from California referred to earlier, just like the Statue of Liberty says, we are open and we allow those people in, and we do even more. The Statue of Liberty did not say, "Give us your poor, your hungry," and all the other things it says, "and the Government will feed them." It says, come on in here and have a chance at American life, come on in and have a chance at the opportunity of America. Nowhere that I see on the Statue of Liberty does it say anything about the Government having welfare programs for everybody for as long as they are in this country. I do not think that is on there. I can check, but I am pretty sure it is not on there. What is on there is an opportunity that America presents to the people in this country, and we continue that, certainly.

Second, we, in this bill, provide for welfare benefits for refugees for 5 years. They are eligible for every benefit that a citizen of this country is eligible for.

Now, why 5 years? Because after 5 years, they are eligible for citizenship, and if they apply for citizenship and go through the program to get their citizenship and are successful, they are citizens and are eligible for every right with respect to social services as any other American. So that is why we limit it to 5 years.

Some would say, "What you're doing here is sort of coercing people to become citizens." I think that is, frankly, not true. I do not think most refugees come here because they are looking for welfare benefits. I think most people come here because they are looking for the things that are on the Statue of Liberty; they are looking for the opportunity that is America. In fact, the vast majority of those people do not end up on welfare, for the long term, anyway. So what we do is we say, "Look, we have an expectation in this country that people are not coming here for social services," and all we are doing is patterning a law to reflect that expectation.

What I just described with respect to refugees also applies to asylees. Asylees are people like the two players from the Cuban baseball team last week, or the week before, who were in this country and escaped from their hotel and claimed political asylum and were granted that asylum. Those two players are probably not going to be needing any welfare benefits, given their talent level.

But there are people who do claim asylum here and end up on welfare, and they are treated the same as refugees: 5 years until they are eligible for citizenship, and then the expectation is you can either decide to be a citizen of this country and avail yourselves of all the benefits and responsibilities of citizenship, or you take the option you are not going to be a citizen and no longer be eligible for these programs. That is a decision you make. It is not a decision we are forcing on anybody. You make that decision. I think that is a reasonable time. It is 5 years. It is a very generous offer. So that is the one side of the immigrant calculation.

The other side is what is called "sponsored immigrants." Those are the majority of immigrants who come to this country. They are people who come here under what is called a sponsorship agreement wherein most—I would not say all—but in the vast majority of cases, these are family members under the family reunification provisions of the immigration law. They are mothers and fathers of people who live in this country; they are sisters and brothers or children of the people who live in this country. They come into this country under this sponsorship agreement.

What does the sponsorship agreement say? If you are the sponsor, if you are the citizen of the country who is bringing in your mother, then you sign a piece of paper that says, "I will take responsibility for providing for the needs of the person I want to bring to this country. I will provide for them. My income, my assets will be deemed available to them for purposes of determining whether they are eligible for benefits." That is under current law.

What does the immigrant who comes to this country sign? They sign a piece of paper that says, "I am willing and capable, able to work, and I will not be a public charge." They sign a legal document saying they will not be a public charge. You say, "That should take care of it. That is pretty solid. They are contracts." One would think they are legally binding when they sign them. The fact is, they are not legally binding.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield on that point for a question?

Mr. SANTORUM. Yes, I will yield.

Mrs. BOXER. I want to make sure the Senator realizes that Senator FEINSTEIN and I, in this amendment, do not change any of the things my friend is talking about. We do not touch anything in the underlying bill.

All the Senator does, and I back her 100 percent, as does the Senator from Florida, is to say that since we are changing the rules that have been in effect for a long time, let's make them apply to people who are coming as of September of this year rather than change the rules for the folks who are here now. But everything the Senator says, Senator FEINSTEIN's amendment does as much for future immigrants. I want to make sure the Senator was clear on that point.

Mr. SANTORUM. For the Senator to suggest the Feinstein amendment does not touch it is not accurate. You say it does not apply to anybody here, so you would remove all the provisions of this act with respect to people in this country.

Mrs. BOXER. It is prospective. Our amendment makes it prospective, but it says to the folks here, "We are not going to change your rules in the middle of the game." All the things my friend is explaining, none of those are touched by the Feinstein-Boxer amendment.

Mr. SANTORUM. They are not touched prospectively. Again, all these provisions I am explaining do apply and will apply to people who are in this country. So, for example, if you have a sponsored immigrant who is in this country receiving welfare benefits, maybe has been receiving them for 20 years, we suggest after 20 years, if you are not a citizen, if you are here receiving welfare benefits, which in many cases—and I was getting to the point with respect to sponsored immigrants, because what has been happening is that we have seen a chronic trend, and the Senator from New Mexico was on the floor yesterday with a chart that illustrates this, what happens with a lot of the sponsored immigrants—and these people are in this country now—is that son and daughter are bringing over mom and dad, and mom and dad come into this country, they sign these documents, they have signed them already, but they are not legally enforceable, No. 1.

No. 2, the welfare departments in the States do not know what the Immigration and Naturalization Service is doing. They do not talk to each other. There is no communication. So mom comes into the country. She is 70 years old. She goes down to the SSI office, and guess what? She is on SSI. By the way, when she qualifies for SSI, she qualifies for Medicaid. When she qualifies for SSI, she qualifies for food stamps, and she qualifies for a whole variety of other programs, all paid for by the taxpayer.

So what we have become in this country, not prospectively, but now, is a retirement home for millions of people all over the world to come here and have you, the taxpayer, pay for their retirement.

Now, I do not think that is right. What the amendment of the Senator from California says is, "Well, they are here, let them stay, and we'll continue to pay for them." If it is wrong, it is wrong. And whether it is prospective or not, it is wrong.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SANTORUM. I will be happy to yield.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Thank you very much for yielding.

Let me make this point. Under present law, affidavits of support are not legally enforceable. In the immigration bill, that is one of the things that is achieved. It is a binding contract, an affidavit, so that in the future these contracts will be legally enforceable. I support that. I agree with you on this point. But the point that we are trying to make is that at present they are not. Therefore, there has been a kind of a change.

The other point that I want to make to you is that this is not the same as the Daschle bill. This bill is not the same as the Daschle bill on this point.

The Daschle bill has certain exemptions. The disabled are exempted. Refugees are exempted. Battered women and children are exempted. Veterans are exempted. That is a point I really appreciate the opportunity to make.

Mr. SANTORUM. With respect to this list, I know in this bill—and I have not read every page of all of this—my belief is veterans are exempted, also. I say to the Senator from California, having worked on this issue for quite some time, I think you may have a legitimate point with respect to a refugee who is 90 years old who is in this country and has been here for a long time as to whether we want to knock them off this system. I suggest to the Senator that, while I will not be a conferee, I would be sympathetic and would communicate my sympathy with respect to some very difficult, isolated cases for the very old or the severely disabled who may be on these programs today. But yours goes well beyond that.

I mean, I think we can look at the hard cases, but I think what your bill does is basically let people who signed a document—it is true that it is not a legally binding document, but I can guarantee you when they set that in front of them, and it is fairly legal looking, when they signed that—I mean, I do not know about you, but when I sign a document, put my name on something saying I am going to do something, I want to live up to that end of the bargain.

We want them to live up to their end of the bargain. What your bill does is let them off the hook. We do not want to let them off the hook. We want people who come to this country who say they are not going be a public charge and people who bring their relatives into this country who say they are going to take care of them to live up to the deal.

What your bill does is say there is no deal, you do whatever you want, and we will pay the charge. I do not think that is what we want to say in this country. I do not think that is what we want to do.

While I understand what your concern is—and the Senator from California is a thoughtful person, and I find myself in agreement with her many times. I think the point you have made with the impact on California, I cannot argue the fact that the impact on California will be disproportionate with respect to this particular provision.

The fact of immigration has, as you know, its pluses and its minuses. You can make the decision, not me, as to whether it is a plus or a minus in California. But what I say is the Congressional Budget Office has said—and I will read from their report that they sent to the Senator from Delaware with respect to unfunded mandates.

Both Senators from California talked extensively about the impact of unfunded mandates as a result of this legislation. Unfunded mandates was a bill that we passed last year that said that we are tired of the Government, the Federal Government, passing bills, imposing mandates on State and local Governments without coming up with the money for these State and local governments to fulfill the mandate, requiring them to do something but not paying them the money to do it.

According to the Congressional Budget Office, this bill does not have unfunded mandates. I will read the section. "On balance"—obviously in every bill there are pluses and minuses. I accept that:

> On balance, spending by State and local governments on federally mandated activities could be reduced by billions of dollars over the next 5 years as a result of the enactment of this bill.

I, again, have some sympathy for the Senator from California because you have a disproportionate impact with respect to legal immigrants. You may be one of those States that is on the minus side while another State is on the plus side. But on balance, in this country, this is not an unfunded mandate. That is the way I think we have to look at things.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANTORUM. I will be happy to.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Just on that one point, if I may. I appreciate what the Senator is saying. But when you continue to read the report that you were reading from the Congressional Budget Office, it does say:

> While the new mandates imposed by the bill would result in additional costs to some States, the repeal of existing mandates and the additional flexibility provided are likely to reduce spending by more than the additional costs.

That cannot be true for California. In a way, it is a play with words because the numbers are so big in California in terms of 52 percent of the impact of this section of the bill with SSI falling on California. Fifty-two percent of all of the SSI users are in California. That is who you are talking about. Those are the elderly. Those are the blind. Those are the disabled. By this bill, boom, they are off. That is the issue that both of us are trying to bring respectfully to your attention.

What I do not understand is—and I understand the savings. See, the reason this section of the bill has the large amount of savings that it does is because of California, because $7 to $9 billion of it is California. The minute you transfer it and it goes to the county—because California alone is a proposition 13 State and cannot raise its property tax to accommodate the general assistance added burden—you could force some counties—and LA could be one under this; you just have to know this because the numbers are so huge in Los Angeles. It is a very precipitous situation.

Mr. SANTORUM. I suggest a couple things to the Senator from California. No. 1, this is a policy that I think needs to be changed, and, No. 2, the fact of the matter is that there are a lot of people on these programs who can and should be working, as a result of their coming into this country and signing this document, should be working under the law.

What your bill does is take those people off the hook. You can say, well, there is going to be a tremendous impact to these counties. Yeah, well, that may be true. But I guess the point I am making is, we should stand up for what people sign their names on, which is that they were going to not be a public charge and the people who are going to take care of them—I go back to the sponsorship agreement.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANTORUM. Let me finish my point. I go back to the sponsorship agreement. What you are ignoring here is, you say, well, it is going to fall on the counties. Under what I described, under the system I described of SSI, for example, who should the burden fall on? Clearly, it should fall on the sponsor—not the county.

Sponsors, when they bring people into this country—there is a certain economic criteria to be able to bring someone in with a sponsor. These people have in fact taken a walk. They have said, well, you know, let the Government pick up this cost. I do not want to pick up mom's cost. I want to buy my other Mercedes. Well, let us not buy another Mercedes. Let us pay for mom.

What you are suggesting is that all these people who have three cars in their garage are going to let mom starve or put them on LA County's welfare rolls, which may not exist as you so eloquently state. I am saying that a lot of these people who sponsor people into this country are going to have to start footing the bill. That is what we are pushing here. You make the assumption that everybody who is on SSI is going to fall on to the county or the State. I do not make that assumption. I make the assumption that people who sign legal documents saying they were going to take care of people are going to now have to belly up. They are going to have to pay the bill.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANTORUM. Yes.

Mrs. BOXER. We do not disagree with you. I want to make it clear. I want to make it clear. The senior Senator from California and I do not disagree with you. We believe that the sponsors who can, should and must pay for people they sponsor to come to the country.

But I want to make a point to my friend. It is worthy to note that approximately 400,000 legal immigrants receive AFDC in California. Out of those, 62 percent are refugees. They do not have a sponsor. This goes back to your debate with the Senator from Florida last night. We also have a situation where many of those on SSI, who are sponsored, something may have happened to their families or their sponsors in the interim.

So, my friend is talking about a principle that we agree with. But yet in the underlying bill there is no recognition of the fact that a lot of these legal immigrants do not have a sponsor to fall back on. A lot of these elderly do not have a sponsor to fall back on.

I think before we pass this sweeping reform, what Senator FEINSTEIN and my amendment does is say, we are willing to say as of September, even though we have some reservations and we know it is tough and we know it will hurt our State, we are willing to go along with it. But please, we say to you, Senator from Pennsylvania, taking a lead in this bill, consider what we are telling you. Rather than just have an argument, maybe there is some room here where we can work together so when we bring this bill out, we will not hurt a lot of kids and a lot of very sick, elderly, and blind people.

Thank you for your generosity.

Mr. SANTORUM. Reclaiming my time to make a couple of points. All the refugees you talk about have a 5-year exemption from the ineligibility for benefits. Anyone that is in this country is eligible for benefits up to the first 5 years they are in this country.

Mrs. BOXER. They are cut off after 5 years.

Mr. SANTORUM. After the fifth year they are no longer eligible. As the Senator from California knows they are eligible, after a 5-year period, to apply for citizenship. Once they apply for citizenship and are accepted, they would again be eligible if, in fact, they need be.

As the Senator from California knows, the hurdle for getting their citizenship in this country is not extraordinary. So if people are, in fact, in such desperate condition as the Senator suggests, I think the answer would be, in fact, to get these people into citizenship programs. I suggest that is a positive thing.

As we all know, those who are noncitizens who do not know the language or cannot, in many cases, successfully interact into the economic mainstream of our country, obviously have a much more difficult time succeeding. So, in fact, forcing or encouraging citizenship would be a positive thing for many of the people that we are talking about here. I think that has to be looked at.

No. 2, we are talking about a 1-year transition. In some cases we will have people who have exhausted their 5 years who now say wait, I will not be eligible for benefits, and I will be brought in for some sort of redetermination here. It will be basically a year process. I suggest during that year process, if they still are concerned or they still are, in fact, disabled or believe they would not be able to work, they can begin to go through the process during that transition year to get their citizenship. I think we provide plenty of avenues for the truly disabled refugees and asylees to be able to stay on these benefits if, in fact, they are truly disabled. It takes some initiative on their part, but my goodness, should we not expect some initiative on the people's part, to create some link between themselves and this country in order to receive benefits?

I remind the Senators from California, I believe, and I can be corrected, but I believe we are the only country in the world who actually provides welfare benefits for their immigrants as soon as they come into this country. We are, in a sense, already very generous. I am not saying we should not be generous to those who are in need. But, at some point, like we are saying to moms who are having children and are on AFDC, there is a contract here. If we are going to limit moms with children on AFDC to 5 years, I think we have every right to limit refugees in this country who come here for 5 years. What we are saying to the refugees, unlike what we are saying to the moms, you get your citizenship in the fifth year, you can get back on the rolls. We do not let moms back on the rolls.

We are being painted as being cruel and knocking all these people off, when in fact what we are being is somewhat principled. I believe it will actually work to the benefit of the refugees who will seek citizenship, which will make them more likely to be successful in their economic life in America.

I think there are a lot of positive things we can say. This is not, as I am sure will be noted in some publications, any kind of immigrant-bashing—nothing like that. We think people who are sponsored immigrants should live up to their contract, and people who are refugees, and immigrants, and asylees should have a period of time in which we will help them, and then at some point they have to help themselves, just like a lot of other people who are going to be dealing with the welfare system with AFDC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYL). The Senator from Pennsylvania has a minute and a half remaining, and the Senator from California has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. SANTORUM. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I say, and I think I speak on behalf of my colleague, Senator BOXER, as well, we are not disputing that the time has come to make some changes. We are not even disputing that perhaps there are some who are on SSI or AFDC that can find other ways of support. What we are disputing is that this language is so ironclad that it throws the baby out with the bath water.

I was mayor of San Francisco for 9 years, a member of the board of supervisors for 9, for a total of 18 years. I know these communities. I can tell you that there are several hundred thousand people who do not have another source of support. In Los Angeles, I know, I have seen it with my own eyes. This bill does not allow for any fine tuning.

I think both Senator BOXER and I would be happy to sit down with the other side and try to work out a process of evaluation whereby you could fine tune this bill so people who truly are blind, who truly can barely walk down a street, who truly have no access to three meals a day can have a source of subsistence in this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is expired.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, pursuant to section 310(d)(2), I raise a point of order against the pending amendment because it reduces outlay savings for the Finance Committee below the level provided in the reconciliation instructions, and the amendment would not make compensating outlay reductions or revenue increases.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Pursuant to Section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. CHAFEE. I understand I am recognized for 15 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 4931

(Purpose: To maintain current eligibility standards for Medicaid and provide additional State flexibility)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, yesterday we voted not to reform the Medicaid Program. This is a welfare bill we are on, not a Medicaid bill. We put off any Medicaid reforms, if you would, until another day. Because of the link between welfare eligibility and Medicaid eligibility, this bill will repeal the guarantee—the word I am using is "guarantee"—it will repeal the guarantee of Medicaid coverage for 1.5 million children age 13 through 18, and 4 million mothers.

Mr. President, once again, this is not a Medicaid bill, yet we repeal existing Medicaid guarantees.

Under our amendment, the amendment I am presenting, and I send to the desk now on behalf of myself, Senators BREAUX, COHEN, GRAHAM, JEFFORDS, KERREY of Nebraska, HATFIELD, MURRAY, SNOWE, LIEBERMAN, REID, and ROCKEFELLER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], for himself, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. COHEN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. KERREY, Mr. HATFIELD, Mrs. MURRAY, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. REID, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER, proposes an amendment numbered 4931.

Mr. CHAFEE. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Beginning with page 256, line 20, strike all through page 259, line 4, and insert the following:

"(12) ASSURING MEDICAID COVERAGE FOR LOW-INCOME FAMILIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, subject to the succeeding provisions of this paragraph, with respect to a State any reference in title XIX (or other provision of law in relation to the operation of such title) to a provision of this part, or a State plan under this part (or a provision of such a plan), including standards and methodologies for determining income and resources under this part or such plan, shall be considered a reference to such a provision or plan as in effect as of July 1, 1996, with respect to the State.

"(B) CONSTRUCTIONS.—

"(i) In applying section 1925(a)(1), the reference to 'section 402(a)(8)(B)(ii)(II)' is deemed a reference to a corresponding earning disregard rule (if any) established under a State program funded under this part (as in effect on or after October 1, 1996).

"(ii) The provisions of former section 406(h) (as in effect on July 1, 1996) shall apply, in relation to title XIX, with respect to individuals who receive assistance under a State program funded under this part (as in effect on or after October 1, 1996) and are eligible for medical assistance under title XIX or who are described in subparagraph (C)(i) in the same manner as they apply as of July 1, 1996, with respect to individuals who become ineligible for aid to families with dependent children as a result (wholly or partly) of the collection or increased collection of child or spousal support under part D of this title.

"(iii) With respect to the reference in section 1902(a)(5) to a State plan approved under this part, a State may treat such reference as a reference either to a State program funded under this part (as in effect on or after October 1, 1996) or to the State plan under title XIX.

"(C) ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of title XIX, subject to clause (ii), in determining eligibility for medical assistance under such title, an individual shall be treated as receiving aid or assistance under a State plan approved under this part (and shall be treated as meeting the income and resource standards under this part) only if the individual meets—

"(I) the income and resource standards for determining eligibility under such plan; and

"(II) the eligibility requirements of such plan under subsections (a) through (c) of former section 406 and former section 407(a), as in effect as of July 1, 1996. Subject to clause (ii)(II), the income and resource methodologies under such plan as of such date shall be used in the determination of whether any individual meets income and resource standards under such plan.

"(ii) STATE OPTION.—For purposes of applying this paragraph, a State may—

"(I) lower its income standards applicable with respect to this part, but not below the income standards applicable under its State plan under this part on May 1, 1988; and

"(II) use income and resource standards or methodologies that are less restrictive than the standards or methodologies used under the State plan under this part as of July 1, 1996.

"(iii) ADDITIONAL STATE OPTION WITH RESPECT OF TANF RECIPIENTS.—For purposes of applying this paragraph to title XIX, a State may, subject to clause (iv), treat all individual (or reasonable categories of individuals) receiving assistance under the State program funded under this part (as in effect on or after October 1, 1996) as individuals who are receiving aid or assistance under a State plan approved under this part (and thereby eligible for medical assistance under title XIX).

"(IV) TRANSITIONAL COVERAGE.—For purposes of section 1925, an individual who is receiving assistance under the State program funded under this part (as in effect on or after October 1, 1996) and is eligible for medical assistance under title XIX shall be treated as an individual receiving aid or assistance pursuant to a State plan approved under this part (as in effect as of July 1, 1996) (and thereby eligible for continuation of medical assistance under such section 1925).

"(D) WAIVERS.—In the case of a waiver of a provision of this part in effect with respect to a State as of July 1, 1996, if the waiver affects eligibility of individuals for medical assistance under title XIX, such waiver may (but need not) continue to be applied, at the option of the State, in relation to such title after the date the waiver would otherwise expire. If a State elects not to continue to apply such a waiver, then, after the date of the expiration of the waiver, subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) shall be applied as if any provisions so waived had not been waived.

"(E) STATE OPTION TO USE 1 APPLICATION FORM.—Nothing in this paragraph, this part, or title XIX, shall be construed as preventing a State from providing for the same application form for assistance under a State program funded under this part (on or after October 1, 1996) and for medical assistance under title XIX.

"(F) REQUIREMENT FOR RECEIPT OF FUNDS.—A State to which a grant is made under section 302 shall take such action as may be necessary to ensure that the provisions of this paragraph are carried out provided that the State is otherwise participating in title XIX of this Act.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, under our amendment, we make sure that no low-income mothers and children who are eligible for Medicaid under current law, under the existing law, will lose their health care coverage under Medicaid if the State lowers its eligibility standards for cash assistance or AFDC.

Now, this is not some open-ended lifetime entitlement to Medicaid coverage. I am sure that will be raised, and we are ready for that one. All this amendment does is apply current law income and resource standards and methodologies in determining eligibility for Medicaid. If a family's income increases, if there is no longer a dependent child in the home, these folks will lose Medicaid eligibility under our amendment, just as they would under current law.

Exactly who are we talking about, Mr. President? First, the individuals we are talking about, their incomes, on an average, are about 38 percent of the poverty level. Some will argue that we do not need this amendment because children under 100 percent of poverty are already covered. In other words, we are worried about these children. Some will say, oh, do not worry about them because if they are at 100 percent of poverty or less, they are covered. But that is not true, Mr. President. By 2002, they will all be covered up to the age of 18, but not until then. Thus, children between the ages of 13 and 18 will not be guaranteed coverage. Their mothers, unless they are pregnant, will lose the guarantees as well.

Mr. President, I refer everyone to this chart. Under the bill that we have, pregnant women continue to be covered. Children under 13 are covered. That is under 100 percent of poverty or less. The aged, blind, and disabled are covered. Who loses out? Who is losing out on the guarantees? It is nonpregnant women and children 13 to 18 that are going to fall through the cracks.

So, Mr. President, some will argue that we are backtracking from previous welfare reform measures by removing this guarantee. I want to remind my colleagues that both the House and the Senate-passed versions of H.R. 4, which passed here 87 to 12, had the very provision in it that I am talking about, which I am seeking to obtain. You might say, well, if the House version had it and the Senate version had it, then, obviously, when we came to conference, it was there. But it was dropped in conference, in some type of maneuver. Even though it was in both bills that were passed, it was dropped from the freestanding welfare reform bill that passed.

I also point out, Mr. President, that the welfare reform bill that passed yesterday in the House of Representatives has this same language that I am talking about here and trying to put into our legislation. Mr. President, if we really want this welfare reform proposal to achieve the results of moving women off of welfare and into work, we should not, in one fell swoop, remove their cash assistance and their medical coverage. This is a prescription, I believe, for failure of welfare reform.

Mr. President, I will conclude my section of the remarks before turning it over to the Senator from Louisiana by saying this. In the Finance Committee, we had all kinds of hearings in connection with welfare reform, and two points came clearly through; that, if you want to get individuals off of welfare—and we are particularly talking, in most of these cases, about women—they need support. One of the two things they need in the form of support is child care, adequate child care and the availability of that; second is Medicaid coverage for themselves and for their children.

So, Mr. President, I earnestly hope that this amendment will be adopted. I think it is one that the managers will accept.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding me some time and for his continued outstanding work in trying to make sure that whatever we do in this body is fair. All of us want to be tough on work. We have said that many times. We also should be fair to children and to pregnant women. We should be fair to those who are the neediest among us.

This legislation makes fundamental changes in the Medicaid Program, and that is not supposed to be what we are doing. Our Republican colleagues have offered an amendment which has taken Medicaid out of the equation. We are working on a welfare bill. But without the Chafee-Breaux amendment and a number of our colleagues, this legislation will still adversely affect those people who are on Medicaid and health care assistance. The question is, why? Very simple. Because under the current law, people who are eligible for AFDC assistance are also eligible for Medicaid. Therefore, under this legislation, the States could be changing all of the eligibility requirements for AFDC and, in doing so, kick off, potentially, 4 million people who are on Medicaid because of their eligibility for AFDC. It sounds complicated, but it is not really. We made a decision in the Congress and the people who run the Medicaid Program that the standards for AFDC would be the standards for Medicaid eligibility. That was a decision that should not now be changed without a careful consideration of whether that is good policy or not.

Nobody is debating Medicaid eligibility on this floor. But when you change the welfare program, you, in fact, will be changing the Medicaid eligibility for millions of Americans. As Senator CHAFEE shows, we are talking about pregnant women, children under 13, people who are the least able to take care of themselves in our country. I think that is just not what we are all about in this country.

It is interesting to note that both the House and the Senate bills that were passed last year contained a provision just like the Chafee amendment. We have already adopted this before. By a vote of 87 to 12, the legislation that contains the Chafee-Breaux amendment was passed by this Senate body. That language in the House bill and in the Senate bill said very clearly that we would continue Medicaid coverage, health care coverage, for poor children and their parents who would have qualified for AFDC assistance under the rules in effect at that time.

Now we have essentially the same bill before the Senate, but it does not have that provision in it anymore. I do not know where it was dropped or how it got dropped. This is almost a technical amendment because we have already adopted this amendment. When the welfare reform bills were previously before the House and the Senate, there was no disagreement in the House and no disagreement in the Senate that the people who are Medicaid-eligible because of AFDC eligibility would continue to have that eligibility. That is what the policy should be. If we want to come back later on and change Medicaid eligibility, let us do it that way. Let us have a fair debate about whether we are going to take the aged, the blind, the disabled, pregnant women, or children, the people least advantaged among us, and kick them off of not only welfare but off of Medicaid, too. At least allow us to have some discussion about it.

With that, Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of the time that was yielded to me from Senator CHAFEE.

Mr. ROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I will soon offer a second-degree amendment to the Chafee-Breaux amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment would not be in order until the time has expired.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I wonder if the Chair would be good enough to point that out again on a second-degree amendment? It cannot be offered until all time has expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, let me discuss the purpose of my amendment. The purpose of my amendment to the Chafee-Breaux amendment is to ensure Medicaid coverage to all individuals currently receiving Medicaid benefits because of their eligibility through the current AFDC Program.

By this approach we would ensure that no child or adult currently receiving Medicaid benefits would lose coverage because of welfare reform.

Let me first explain that under our bill as currently written we believe that no child would lose Medicaid coverage because of welfare reform. The Congressional Budget Office has not scored any Medicaid babies because of the change in AFDC. But how can that be?

The overwhelming reason for this is because Medicaid eligibility is no longer tied exclusively to AFDC eligibility. Medicaid eligibility was expanded in the late 1980's and is now tied to the national poverty level as well as to AFDC eligibility. This is an important point. Medicaid eligibility is higher than State AFDC eligibility. We believe that children currently receiving Medicaid would not be affected by the change to the AFDC Program. The minimum Federal standard is that pregnant women, infants, and children, and children under the age of 6, under 133 percent of the Federal poverty level, must be covered by Medicaid. Children age 6 to 13 must be covered if under 100 percent of the poverty level.

Moreover, the General Accounting Office recently reported that 40 States have already expanded Medicaid coverage to pregnant women, infants, or children beyond these Federal mandates. One State has chosen to go as high as 300 percent of the Federal poverty level. Thirty-two States extend coverage to pregnant women and children up to 150 percent of the poverty level. Some States have extended coverage to children up to 19 years of age.

So the overwhelming evidence points to the conclusion that States are expanding Medicaid eligibility, not reducing it.

For 3 years President Clinton has been saying that the key to getting people off welfare is giving child care and Medicaid coverage. Governors already know this, and that is what they are doing. But to be on the cautious side, the bill, as amended, in committee provides for a 1-year transition period for anyone who may lose Medicaid eligibility as States change AFDC into the block grants, if there is still some concern that this is not enough. That is the reason that at the appropriate moment I will offer my amendment to grandfather in those individuals currently receiving Medicaid benefits so long as they are still under the poverty level.

Let me point out, Mr. President, that there is no difference between the Chafee-Breaux amendment and my amendment in the second degree in regard to individuals currently receiving Medicaid. As I have already indicated, those individuals will continue to receive Medicaid, an approach which I think is, indeed, fair and equitable. The difference is that the Chafee-Breaux amendment applies to categories rather than people. That means that someone 5 or 10 years from now may not qualify for Medicaid under a State's new welfare program. Nevertheless, they could claim eligibility under the old program.

It seems to me that this creates serious issues of inequity. I think it also is very burdensome to the State as it would require them to maintain these eligibility standards without end. I know that the Governors are deeply concerned about the Chafee-Breaux approach. They think it is unduly administratively burdensome to have to maintain two sets of systems. It is in contrast with the purpose of this legislation which is to create flexibility as we move forward with welfare reform, Medicaid, and other reforms. What we hope to do is to develop the kind of flexibility that will enable the States to develop approaches to these problems that brings some positive result. But it is hard to see how requiring a State to continue indefinitely an old program as the Chafee-Breaux amendment does. It is, indeed, hard to grasp.

So I hope that my good friends and colleagues, Senator CHAFEE and Senator BREAUX, would look at the amendment which I intend to offer as soon as all time has expired. As I said, it seems to me that this is, indeed, a fair and equitable approach. We are protecting those who are currently receiving Medicaid under AFDC. They will continue indefinitely to be eligible so long as they meet the requirements of AFDC. But I find it hard to see the equity, the fairness, the reason for, or the principle behind that we should continue in effect old programs that are going to be modified.

The basic purpose of welfare reform is to provide flexibility to the States. We think that the Chafee-Breaux amendment is a step in the opposite direction.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from West Virginia 2 minutes.

Mr. President, I have how much time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Five minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I hope Members on both sides of the aisle will vote for this amendment offered by my colleagues from Rhode Island and Louisiana, Senators CHAFEE and BREAUX. It is the kind of amendment that deserves strong support from this body.

There is absolutely no reason for welfare reform to cause innocent children to lose health insurance. We can and we should enact a bill that is very tough and very clear about requiring adults to work or prepare for work if they want to get public assistance. But we do need to pass the Chafee-Breaux amendment to make sure that children who are eligible for Medicaid do not lose their health coverage as we change the welfare system. We need to pass this amendment to make sure that losing health care is not the price of leaving welfare and getting a job.

Mr. President, with this amendment, we are not proposing a new benefit or new spending. We are just trying to protect the way that poor children now can see a doctor when they're sick, get their vaccinations and their checkups, and receive basic medical care. Up to 1.5 million children and 4 million parents are at serious risk of losing their Medicaid coverage unless this amendment prevails.

Mr. President, I truly believe the American people, including West Virginians, want us to adopt this amendment. The public has made it very clear that they expect Congress to make distinctions between responsible reform and reckless change. Americans want all children to have a chance in this country, and they know that health care is where that chance starts and lasts. You have to be healthy to learn, to grow, and to become productive.

As our constituents demand changes in welfare, they are not asking us to abandon children or take health care away from those who need it. In fact, they get pretty upset when they see Congress doing something that will hurt children or health care.

It is counterintuitive, counterproductive, and just plain wrong to push the parents of poor children into the workplace, and then pull health care out from under them. The mothers who succeed in leaving welfare for work are rarely going to start with jobs that offer health insurance for themselves or their families. According to one study, 78 percent of women who worked their way off welfare ended up in jobs that did not offer health insurance. Two-thirds of these women were still not able to get insurance after 18 months.

It is cruel to ask a mother to make the choice between working and holding onto health insurance.

This amendment is the critical way we can make sure parents have every reason to get a job and get off welfare—because Medicaid will be a source of coverage for a limited amount of time, for the transition from welfare to work.

Congress is going to make bold changes in the welfare system. But please, let's not take the country backward in this life-and-death issue of health care for children and their parents as they leave welfare for work. It's our responsibility to deal with this part of the health care system, because unfortunately, the private sector just isn't there. Medicaid has to be there for them, or these families and children join the uninsured and have a much more difficult time getting out of the rut they're trying to escape.

Ask any doctor, hospital, or community—when families don't have health insurance, they end up using the emergency room as their source of health care. That's costly, inefficient, and burdens the health care system.

Mr. President, as we act on welfare reform, I hope we realize it is not just about saving money. We want to promote personal responsibility, the work ethic, and stronger families. The Chafee-Breaux amendment is a very specific way all of us in this body can make sure that poor families are not punished in the cruelest way, by losing their health insurance. All we want to do is to make sure basic health care is still there for these children and families while we get much tougher about the parents getting work and getting off welfare for good. I urge all of my colleagues to support this amendment, which will make it even more possible for low-income parents to join the work force.

Congress decided more than 10 years ago that the Federal Government had an important role in setting minimum standards of health coverage for pregnant women and children. Congress voted for—and two Republican Presidents signed—legislation in 1986, in 1987, in 1988, in 1989, and in 1990 that no matter where they lived, children were guaranteed a decent standard of health coverage.

Texas currently sets its overall eligibility for Medicaid at 18 percent of poverty except for pregnant women and young children because, frankly, Congress forced it and many other States to set higher standards for pregnant women and children. While many of my colleagues do not want to, in any way, impinge on a State's flexibility, there is a time and place for decent minimal standards. Mr. President, this is the time, and this is the place. This is for some of our country's neediest children.

Mr. President, let us not go back in time, and repeal extremely important health care protections for pregnant women and children.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to save 2 minutes for the Senator from Florida, who is expected. So I will save that time for him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Who yields time?

The time runs equally if neither side seeks recognition.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes and 20 seconds.

Mr. CHAFEE. I will use up the remainder of my time.

Mr. President, the second-degree amendment, as I understand it, by the Senator from Delaware says that all those individuals who are currently eligible for Medicaid would be eligible in the future even though the eligibility standards might be lowered, and thus if a new person came along, they would not be eligible for Medicaid because the cash assistance payments standard would have been lowered.

Mr. President, to me that is a very impractical proposal because what you have to do is get a list of everybody who is currently, I presume, on Medicaid, who meets the eligibility standards, and then I presume that is the permanent list.

If somebody comes along who is at the same level, so you have two women side by side, one who qualifies because of the existing standards and another comes along in the future who does not quite get there by whatever date this bill passes and the AFDC standards or the cash assistance standards have then been dropped, this other woman does not qualify, she and her children. She has dependent children. You might say, "Oh, no, do not worry about those children; they are taken care of under the 100 percent poverty."

No, they are not. That is very clear—100 percent of poverty only covers those under 13. Next year it will be 14 and 15. But a woman who has a 15-year old child comes along, with the same financial situation as her neighbor, who came in time to qualify and gets it, and the second one does not, that is not very fair.

So I hope, Mr. President, when we come to vote on this second-degree amendment, as I understand it and as it has been explained, it will be rejected, and then we can get to the Chafee-Breaux amendment as originally proposed and take care of these individuals who are being knocked off—nonpregnant women and children 13 through 18.

How much time do I have, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes and 59 seconds.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded or used.

AMENDMENT NO. 4932 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4931

(Purpose: To maintain the eligibility for medicaid for any individual who is receiving medicaid based on their receipt of AFDC, foster care or adoption assistance, and to provide transitional medicaid for families moving from welfare to work)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I now call up my amendment in the second degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH] proposes an amendment numbered 4932 to amendment No. 4931.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

"(12) CONTINUATION OF MEDICAID FOR CERTAIN LOW-INCOME INDIVIDUALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, a State to which a grant is made under section 403 shall take such action as may be necessary to ensure that—

"(i) any individual who, as of the date of the enactment of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996, is receiving medical assistance under title XIX as a result of such individual's receipt of aid or assistance under a State plan approved under this part (as in effect on July 1, 1996), or under a State plan approved under part E (as so in effect)—

"(I) shall be eligible for medical assistance under the State's plan approved under title XIX, so long as such individual continues to meet the eligibility requirements applicable to such individual under the State's plan approved under this part (as in effect on July 1, 1996); and

"(II) with respect to such individual, any reference in—

"(aa) title XIX;

"(bb) any other provision of law in relation to the operation of such title;

(cc) the State plan under such title of the State in which such individual resides; or

"(dd) any other provision of State law in relation to the operation of such State plan under such title, to a provision of this part, or a State plan under this part (or a provision of such a plan), including standards and methodologies for determining income and resources under this part or such plan, shall be considered a reference to such a provision or plan as in effect as of July 1, 1996; and

"(ii) except as provided in subparagraph (B), if any family becomes ineligible to receive assistance under the State program funded under this part as a result of—

"(I) increased earnings from employment;

"(II) the collection or increased collection of child or spousal support; or

"(III) a combination of the matters described in subclauses (I) and (II), and such family received such assistance in at least 3 of the 6 months immediately preceding the month in which such ineligibility begins, the family shall be eligible for medical assistance under the State's plan approved under title XIX during the immediately succeeding 12-month period for so long as family income (as defined by the State), excluding any refund of Federal income taxes made by reason of section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to earned income tax credit) and any payment made by an employer under section 3507 of such Code (relating to advance payment of earned income credit), is less than the poverty line, and that the family will be appropriately notified of such eligibility.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—No medical assistance may be provided under subparagraph (A) to any family that contains an individual who has had all or part of any assistance provided under this part (as in effect on July 1, 1996, or as in effect, with respect to a State, on and after the effective date of chapter 1 of subtitle A of title II of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996) terminated as a result of the application of—

"(i) a preceding paragraph of this subsection;

"(ii) section 407(e)(1); or

"(iii) in the case of a family that includes an individual described in clause (i) of subparagraph (A), a sanction imposed under the State plan under this part (as in effect on July 1, 1996).

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I have, of course, already discussed the purpose of my amendment. As I said, the purpose of my amendment is to ensure Medicaid coverage to all individuals currently receiving Medicaid benefits because of their eligibility through the current AFDC program. As I said, this would ensure no child or adult currently receiving Medicaid benefits would lose coverage because of welfare reform. I believe this is fair. I think it is equitable. I think it just makes common sense.

Yes, there are going to be changes in the future. That is the reason we are providing for welfare reform. Hopefully, at a later stage we will have Medicaid reform. I personally thought it was a mistake to separate the two reforms because they are interrelated. But it makes no sense to me, when we are trying to provide greater flexibility to the Governors, to require that two sets or systems of eligibility be maintained if a State changes the welfare program under TANF.

As far as the administrative burdens are concerned, I would say to my good friend from Rhode Island, that his plan, too, will require the maintenance of two books. The difference is that in time ours will become less important.

But I hope the sponsors of the basic amendment will review and look at my proposal, as I believe it is an approach that does provide for equity in that it guarantees all those who are currently receiving Medicaid benefits under AFDC would continue to do so.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, do I understand we have 15 minutes on the new amendment? Is that the proposal? I guess there was never any time agreement, was there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the second-degree amendment there is 1 hour equally divided, controlled half an hour on each side.

Mr. CHAFEE. I will just take a couple of minutes.

Mr. President, it seems to me we have to make up our minds around here. Are we dealing with Medicaid reform or are we not? The ground rules were—what we did in the Finance Committee, we dealt with welfare, we dealt with Medicaid. Then we came to the floor and we dropped off the Medicaid provisions.

Now what we are trying to do, it seems to me, in a back-door way, is make very severe changes in Medicaid without us considering it a Medicaid bill. If we are dealing with Medicaid we get into all kind of different things. We get into the Boland amendment and matters we dealt with in the Finance Committee. But that is not the approach.

Yes, it was very clear, we are severing the two: Welfare is here, Medicaid is here; we are dropping Medicaid off and sticking with welfare. Yet in one fell swoop here, because of the eligibility standards of AFDC, or cash assistance, Medicaid goes along with it. And you have to be very, very careful then. When you have dropped the major Medicaid portions of the bill, what are you going to do about this group that loses their Medicaid coverage, the ones I am talking about? It does not do any good to say that is all right, we will take care of those on the list now. What about in the future? Are we going to let a State just drop right down on its cash assistance way below the levels they are not permitted to go now—which is May 1, 1988—and then go right down? OK, that is welfare reform.

We say if they are 38 percent of poverty on May 1, 1988, if they want to go down to 15 percent of poverty, all right. That is welfare reform. But they should not, the individuals should not lose their Medicaid coverage in those changes. That is the problem with the second-degree amendment that was presented here.

We will have a chance to visit more on this, I presume. I do not know what the arrangement is for Tuesday. I suppose we will go right into the votes. Maybe a minute or 2 minutes equally divided and an explanation of some type, as we have done here today. I might say, as you know all, the amendments we voted on today and were debated last evening, all were under an arrangement of no second-degree amendments. Today is different, apparently. So the chairman of the Finance Committee came forward with a second-degree amendment.

Mr. President, I would like, on my time, to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee if I am correct in believing that you could end up with a situation where you have two similar individuals, let us say women on welfare currently. Let us just look ahead a year from now. Under this proposal, you could find one individual currently receiving Medicaid coverage and another individual in exactly the same position—exactly, children the same age, earned income exactly the same, welfare benefits exactly the same. One would be entitled to Medicaid coverage and one would not be, because that second woman is not on the rolls currently? Am I correct in that? I ask the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Rhode Island, that is correct. What we have provided here is a transition rule, trying to ease the change by providing that all women and children who are currently receiving Medicaid benefits because of AFDC programs will continue to do so. But, to answer him directly, yes, that is true for a year from now and it will be true 5 years from now. It would be true 10 years from now.

Mr. CHAFEE. I wonder if I am also correct in suggesting that, under the proposal of the Senator from Delaware, under his second-degree amendment, you could have a situation where the woman is on the rolls now and therefore she is Medicaid eligible. Then suppose she goes off as a result of earnings. Can that individual come back on if her earnings fall below the earnings limitation? Yes, fall below, so she would be eligible once again for cash assistance? Would she get Medicaid?

Mr. ROTH. Once people go off the rolls, their eligibility in the future would depend upon the new program. So they would not go back on the basis of AFDC.

Mr. CHAFEE. So it seems to me that an individual who is locked in under the present system, as suggested by the second-degree amendment, that individual would make a great mistake to get off Medicaid, because, let's say, the eligibility was dropped and they would not currently qualify. So the key thing is to stay on Medicaid, do not get off.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. Sure.

Mr. SANTORUM. I do not think that would be correct. If the person is no longer eligible for AFDC, what you are suggesting is they should keep working in a low-wage job just for the purposes of keeping Medicaid and not try to get a promotion where you can get benefits and other kinds of things. I am not sure that would be a logical economic move for somebody.

Mr. CHAFEE. I am sorry, did I miss a question?

Mr. SANTORUM. I said, what you are suggesting is that someone who is no longer on AFDC but is Medicaid eligible because of this grandfathering is not going to have an incentive to take a better job, potentially with benefits, potentially with opportunities for greater advancement, because if they come into a situation where they lose that job, they would not be able to get back on Medicaid. I am looking at someone making an economically rational decision. To me that would not be an economically rational decision.

I think the grandfathering does take care of that situation, and if that mother does have a problem and falls back on AFDC, she is then eligible for Medicaid again. I do not think I see the problem that the Senator from Rhode Island has put forward.

Mr. CHAFEE. That is not the testimony that we had before the Finance Committee. The testimony we had was very clear that the Medicaid situation is a big factor, not just for the adult, but for the children likewise. It affects people's behavior.

Mr. SANTORUM. These are people who are not on AFDC anymore. These are people who are working, because if they were on AFDC, they would be included under the new program.

Mr. CHAFEE. What we are talking about here are two different standards. Let's say under current law, somebody is eligible for AFDC. Automatically that individual gets Medicaid. In the welfare reform bill that we have before us, we are saying to the States, "You're not bound by that May 1988 level. You can go below that, if you want."

OK, that is fine, we all agree with that. That is what we voted on. But let's say the May 1988 levels were in the State 50 percent of the poverty level, and the State decides, "We're going to get tougher on welfare eligibility. We're going to make it so you can't get it if you are above 38 percent of the poverty level."

Under the Roth proposal, he is saying, "That is right, you drop it down, but if you are currently receiving Medicaid at the 50 percent level, that is all right, forget the 38 percent, you are taken care of."

What I am saying is that that person who now is covered is going to be very, very reluctant to get off Medicaid and take a job, because that person cannot get back on, according to the information I received from the manager of the bill.

Mr. ROTH. Inherent in what the Senator from Rhode Island is saying is that the Governors, in developing new programs, are inherently going to shortchange those on welfare. The fact is, and as you know, in the Finance Committee, it was clearly shown that much of the spending in welfare, Medicaid and other programs is beyond what is required by the Federal Government. In fact, I think in the case of Medicaid, they were spending more than 50 percent on a voluntary basis.

So I think it is wrong to assume necessarily that the programs that are going to be developed under TANF are going to be less desirable.

Let me say, a family could increase earnings and drop off AFDC but still be eligible for Medicaid if less than 100 percent of poverty. So there are alternatives.

I yield the floor.

Mr. CHAFEE. I am ready to yield my time back, if the manager of the bill is ready to yield his back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Under the previous order, the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. CONRAD, will be recognized to offer his amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. I did not say I yielded my time back, I said "ready to yield my time back."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair misunderstood.

Mr. CHAFEE. So I still have time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 26 minutes; the other side has 18 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 4933 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4931

(Purpose: To maintain current eligibility standards for medicaid and provide additional State flexibility)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I do now yield back my time, and send a perfecting amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], for himself, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. COHEN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. KERREY, Mr. HATFIELD, Mrs. MURRAY, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. REID, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER, proposes an amendment numbered 4933 to amendment No. 4931.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JEFFORDS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike all after the first word and insert the following:

MEDICAID COVERAGE FOR LOW-INCOME FAMILIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, subject to the succeeding provisions of this paragraph, with respect to a State any reference in title XIX (or other provision of law in relation to the operation of such title) to a provision of this part, or a State plan under this part (or a provision of such a plan), including standards and methodologies for determining income and resources under this part or such plan, shall be considered a reference to such a provision or plan as in effect as of July 1, 1996, with respect to the State.

"(B) CONSTRUCTIONS.—

"(i) In applying section 1925(a)(1), the reference to 'section 402(a)(8)(B)(ii)(II)' is deemed a reference to a corresponding earning disregard rule (if any) established under a State program funded under this part (as in effect on or after October 1, 1996).

"(ii) The provisions of former section 406(h) (as in effect on July 1, 1996) shall apply, in relation to title XIX, with respect to individuals who receive assistance under a State program funded under this part (as in effect on or after October 1, 1996) and are eligible for medical assistance under title XIX or who are described in subparagraph (C)(i) in the same manner as they apply as of July 1, 1996, with respect to individuals who become ineligible for aid to families with dependent children as a result (wholly or partly) of the collection or increased collection of child or spousal support under part D of this title.

"(iii) With respect to the reference in section 1902(a)(5) to a State plan approved under this part, a State may treat such reference as a reference either to a State program funded under this part (as in effect on or after October 1, 1996) or to the State plan under title XIX.

"(C) ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of title XIX, subject to clause (ii), in determining eligibility for medical assistance under such title, an individual shall be treated as receiving aid or assistance under a State plan approved under this part (and shall be treated as meeting the income and resource standards under this part) only if the individual meets—

"(I) the income and resource standards for determining eligibility under such plan; and

"(II) the eligibility requirements of such plan under subsections (a) through (c) of former section 406 and former section 407(a), as in effect as of July 1, 1996. Subject to clause (ii)(II), the income and resource methodologies under such plan as of such date shall be used in the determination of whether any individual meets income and resource standards under such plan.

"(ii) STATE OPTION.—For purposes of applying this paragraph, a State may—

"(I) lower its income standards applicable with respect to this part, but not below the income standards applicable under its State plan under this part on May 1, 1988; and

"(II) use income and resource standards or methodologies that are less restrictive than the standards or methodologies used under the State plan under this part as of July 1, 1996.

"(iv) TRANSITIONAL COVERAGE.—For purposes of section 1925, an individual who is receiving assistance under the State program funded under this part (as in effect on or after October 1, 1996) and is eligible for medical assistance under title XIX shall be treated as an individual receiving aid or assistance pursuant to a State plan approved under this part (as in effect as of July 1, 1996) (and thereby eligible for continuation of medical assistance under such section 1925).

"(D) WAIVERS.—In the case of a waiver of a provision of this part in effect with respect to a State as of July 1, 1996, if the waiver affects eligibility of individuals for medical assistance under title XIX, such waiver may (but need not) continue to be applied, at the option of the State, in relation to such title after the date the waiver would otherwise expire. If a State elects not to continue to apply such a waiver, then, after the date of the expiration of the waiver, subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) shall be applied as if any provisions so waived had not been waived.

"(E) STATE OPTION TO USE 1 APPLICATION FORM.—Nothing in this paragraph, this part, or title XIX, shall be construed as preventing a State from providing for the same application form for assistance under a State program funded under this part (on or after October 1, 1996) and for medical assistance under title XIX.

"(F) REQUIREMENT FOR RECEIPT OF FUNDS.—A State to which a grant is made under section 403 shall take such action as may be necessary to ensure that the provisions of this paragraph are carried out provided that the state is otherwise participating in title XIX of this Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there is 1 hour for debate equally divided. Who yields time?

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. CHAFEE. If I could just have 30 seconds to explain the perfecting amendment. What that does is make sure that that population that I was previously discussing, who now or in the future qualify under the present eligibility rules, will continue to be eligible for Medicaid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SANTORUM. We yield back the remainder of our time.

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields back the remainder of his time.

Mr. CONRAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 4934

(Purpose: To strike the State food assistance block grant)

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I call up my amendment that is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD], for himself, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. KERREY, Mr. LEAHY, Mrs. MURRAY, and Mr. REID, proposes amendment numbered 4934.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 8, line 24, strike "for fiscal year 1996" and insert "for the period beginning October 1, 1995, and ending November 30, 1996".

On page 9, strike lines 1 through 5 and insert the following:

"(ii) for the period beginning December 1, 1996, and ending September 30, 2001, $120, $206, $170, $242, and $106, respectively;

"(iii) for the period beginning October 1, 2001, and ending August 31, 2002, $113, $193, $159, $227, and $100, respectively; and

"(iv) for the period beginning September 1, 2002, and ending September 30, 2002, $120, $206, $170, $242, and $106, respectively.

Beginning on page 94, strike line 14 and all that follows through page 111, line 6.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I am proud to be joined by my colleague, Senator JEFFORDS, the distinguished occupant of the Chair, Senators KERREY, LEAHY, MURRAY, and REID in offering an amendment to preserve our Nation's Food Stamp Program by eliminating the food stamp block grant.

This is one of the most important issues in the pending welfare reform legislation. Members in this Chamber and people around the country often talk of the need for a real bipartisan effort to reform our welfare system. Our amendment is a true bipartisan undertaking.

I am hopeful that my colleagues will consider the amendment and the benefits it will provide for our Nation's children and elderly, our cities and our rural areas. Block granting the Food Stamp Program is a mistake for this country. I am confident that if my colleagues give careful consideration to the Food Stamp Program, how it works, who it serves, and how it was developed, that they will vote for our amendment.

I want to make clear to my colleagues and others who are watching what this amendment is about. It is about providing food to hungry people. That is what is at issue. This amendment is about making certain that hungry people are fed. That is the most basic test of the fundamental decency of any society. Are hungry people fed? This amendment provides the answer. It says that in America hungry people will not go without food.

Mr. President, I want to make clear at the outset that the cost of our amendment is fully offset over the 6-year budget period. This amendment reduces the standard deduction in order to provide the revenue necessary to pay for the amendment. With our amendment, the Agriculture Committee will still be in full compliance with its budget reconciliation target.

Mr. President, the Food Stamp Program is the anchor for our Nation's nutritional safety net. The program developed from a decision by Congress that no child, indeed no person, in our wealthy country with its abundant food supply should go hungry.

My colleagues will remember that former Senator Dole, the apparent Republican Presidential nominee, was a leader in this effort. So, too, was former Senator George McGovern, a former Democratic Presidential nominee. In fact, we ought to wish former Senator McGovern a happy birthday because this is Senator McGovern's birthday today.

So we had a fully bipartisan effort that formed the Food Stamp Program. It remains a valid goal for our country and for those of us in this Chamber who share with our colleagues in the House of Representatives and the President of the United States the responsibility for making these decisions.

My colleagues should know that fully 51 percent of food stamp recipients are children, 7 percent are elderly, and 9 percent are disabled.

To further illustrate, I have brought with me this chart indicating the distribution of food stamp benefits to households. And 82 percent of food stamp households are households with children. This chart shows that. Now, 82 percent of the food stamp eligible households in this country are households with children. Only 18 percent are without children.

Mr. President, I want to make clear, we are defending the basic notion of a Food Stamp Program. That does not mean that we are not supportive of changes to reform the Food Stamp Program, to improve its implementation and to save money, because this bill has substantial savings out of the Food Stamp Program, over $20 billion.

We are not affecting those savings. But we are saying, do not block grant the Food Stamp Program. Do not do that. That is a mistake for this country. And it will fundamentally undermine the Food Stamp Program and the nutritional safety net that it provides.

Mr. President, currently every child who needs food is eligible for food stamps. Under a block grant, a State would have no obligation to provide benefits to children—none, no obligation to provide for children. There are no standards whatsoever regarding who should receive benefits or how much in benefits they should receive under the bill we have before us.

Mr. President, block granting the Food Stamp Program would tear a hole in the safety net that makes certain 14 million children do not go to bed hungry at night or do not go to school with hunger pains. This is what preserving our Nation's Food Stamp Program is about. And these are the people we place at risk by block granting the Food Stamp Program and eliminating the food safety net.

The Food Stamp Program, as my colleagues know well, is a carefully crafted program that has a tremendously impressive history of responding to economic fluctuations in our country and changes in child and adult poverty levels. The Food Stamp Program has been successful in fighting hunger because it automatically covers more people when economic downturns or natural disasters push more Americans below the poverty line.

Block granting the Food Stamp Program would eliminate this automatic response to increases in poverty that the current program provides. I have brought two charts which illustrate the Food Stamp Program's responsiveness to fluctuations in poverty.

The first is a chart that shows from 1979 to 1993 how the Food Stamp Program responded directly to changes in the overall poverty rate. My colleagues can see the red line shows the poverty population in this country. The blue line shows food stamp participation. As poverty rates have changed, as the incidence of poverty has changed, one can see that the food stamp participation rate has moved in tandem with it. In other words, responding directly to increases in poverty.

The second chart is perhaps more compelling to those who think the Federal Government should protect kids but are less sympathetic to their parents. This chart illustrates how the Food Stamp Program responds to changes in the child poverty rate. Again, the red line shows increases in the child poverty rate from 1979 through 1993. Again, the food stamp participation rate tracks closely with it. Make no mistake, the Food Stamp Program is the most important part of our arsenal to fight the battle against poverty in America.

This responsiveness, the responsiveness of the Food Stamp Program to economic fluctuations, led the National Governors' Association and the drafters of this welfare bill to improve the AFDC block grant contingency fund trigger by basing it on an increase in food stamp participation.

Mr. President, it does not make sense to turn around and block grant the program and eliminate the program's ability to respond to dramatic changes caused by economic downturns or natural disasters. It makes no sense to take away that automatic stabilizer that is a central feature of the Food Stamp Program.

Again, this does not mean we cannot make changes in the Food Stamp Program. We can. We should. We should achieve additional savings, and we will. This amendment does not affect those changes and those savings.

A block grant with limited funding cannot respond to changes in poverty levels, nor can it respond to a severe economic downturn or to a natural disaster. The need for a State to help its children, elderly, and working families, would come precisely at a time when the State's economy is least able to support increased food assistance expenditures.

Let me just share with my colleagues the example from the State of Florida, because I think it is most instructive. I want to make clear this is not a question of Governors or States being mean-spirited or wanting to limit food stamps in a time of need. We are not questioning here the good faith of our Nation's Governors. We are not questioning the good faith of our Nation's State legislators. This is a question of economic reality. There simply is no way for any State to accurately plan in advance for dramatic increases in food aid required by severe economic downturns or natural disasters.

Governor Chiles of Florida gave testimony at the Senate agriculture hearing on nutrition in May of last year that illustrated this point. He included a chart with his testimony which outlined Florida's food stamp participation benefits from October 1987 to January 1995. I have brought the chart of Governor Chiles because I think it can help Members understand why block granting the Food Stamp Program could have unintended consequences we would all regret.

The way the food stamp block grant is structured in the bill before the Senate, a State is required to decide several months before the beginning of the next fiscal year if it wants to exercise the block grant option. A State would then be bound to its decision for the remainder of the fiscal year. Therein lies the problem, Mr. President.

We will look at the chart from Florida that Governor Chiles presented. From October 1987 to October 1989, we can see the demand for food stamps in Florida was level. No block grant demands were increasing. They were basically stable. So a Governor could have felt confident that his or her State would have been better off with the block grant and would not put anyone at risk of going hungry if they were basing that on the experience of 1987 to 1989.

However, from October 1989 to mid-1992, there was a national recession, and Florida's food stamp caseload exploded. One can see how the food stamp caseload just went up on almost a straight line in the State of Florida. No block grant could have responded to the increase in families that needed food stamps in Florida during this time. No State would be able to predict or prepare for this dramatic growth in demand for food assistance.

That was not the end of the story in Florida because we will recall the testimony of Governor Chiles. Then the big one hit, a natural disaster. The natural disaster was Hurricane Andrew, and its devastating blow was felt all across Florida. The sharp increase in demand for food aid help in September 1992 shows the impact of Hurricane Andrew. A block grant could not have responded to the immediate and massive need for food created by this natural disaster.

Mr. President, this is a central point with respect to this amendment. If we adopt a circumstance in which a State must commit to a flat amount of funding, a flat block grant amount for food stamps, and then that State is hit by either an economic downturn, impossible to predict, or a natural disaster, again, impossible to predict, and the demand for food aid skyrockets as it did in Florida, the need for food for that State's children and for other people could not and would not be met.

Mr. President, Florida is not alone. Natural disasters hit nearly every State in the last year, from a drought in Texas to flooding in Missouri, to earthquakes in California. We all know the litany of natural disasters over the last several years. Are we really going to abandon the children in those States to a flat amount of funding for food stamps with no ability to adjust for an economic downturn or a natural disaster? I think not. I think America is better than that. The National Food Stamp Program should respond to the needs of families that temporarily need food during these times of crisis.

As a matter of fact, using almost exactly the same formula as is in the current welfare proposal, the U.S. Department of Agriculture estimated if a block grant proposal had been enacted in 1990, in 1994 every State would have fallen short of the funding needed to provide food aid for their children. Choose any State and children would have suffered.

Mr. President, the case for this amendment does not end there. The obligation that is in the bill before the Senate could destroy the Food Stamp Program. I believe we have a strong national interest in ensuring that children and other vulnerable members of our society do not go hungry. Others may argue this is a State option, that the decision to take the risk that children go hungry should be left to each State.

It is not that simple, Mr. President. The block grant option contains within it the potential to destroy the National Food Stamp Program. That is because if States opt for the block grant, their representatives no longer have a stake in the Federal program. They could vote for deep cuts in the Food Stamp Program without any adverse impact on their States or districts.

Mr. President, I believe the underlying bill has in it the seeds of the destruction of the Food Stamp Program. Too many of us have labored for too long on a bipartisan basis to make certain that if people are hungry in this country, they have a chance of being fed, to allow that to happen.

I also want to emphasize there is a different rationale for block granting the AFDC Program than the Food Stamp Program. We have heard many calls for block granting the AFDC Program. That has a certain logic to it. Many States have indicated their desire to block grant the AFDC Program in order to make better use of the significant number of State dollars that are spent on the AFDC Program. States may also want block grants for AFDC, in the hope of eventually achieving savings at the State level. These arguments do not apply to the Food Stamp Program because it is a Federal program. Food stamp benefits are fully funded by the Federal Government. There is no State match. There is no State maintenance of effort requirement.

Mr. President, I also want to address the issue of State flexibility. I firmly believe that real welfare reform requires greatly increased State flexibility. I introduced an entire welfare reform package of my own, which provided for a dramatic increase in tax flexibility. That made sense. I have already explained why a block grant approach to food stamps is bad policy and completely undermines the benefits and integrity of the Food Stamp Program.

I know, however, that there are those in this Chamber who support the block grants solely on the basis of supporting anything that increases State flexibility. I will address this issue because it is important. Without the block grant, the welfare bill before us makes the biggest steps to expand State flexibility in operating the Food Stamp Program that the program has experienced in two decades. States will have broad, new authority to simplify food stamp rules and develop their own policies to promote work and responsibility. That is as it should be.

States will have broad, new flexibility to streamline food stamp benefits to coordinate with their application of benefits under the AFDC block grant. They have the option to convert food stamp benefits to wage subsidies, and the option to determine if they want to provide benefits to people who are delinquent in child support payments. States also have almost complete flexibility to structure programs to promote employment and self-sufficiency and to impose strict work requirements.

Federal rules impeding implementation of State electronic benefit transfer systems would be eliminated under the current bill, as would a large number of provisions which micromanage food stamp administration. We do not change any of that, Mr. President. That dramatically increased State flexibility is completely preserved under the amendment we are offering. I understand and support the need for State flexibility. But, as I have already pointed out, this is a Federal program, part of a national commitment to ensure that children and vulnerable Americans do not go hungry. And it works. We here in the Senate have a responsibility to ensure that Federal tax dollars applied to the Food Stamp Program succeed in fulfilling this commitment. We should not use the doctrine of State flexibility to put millions of American children and seniors at risk of going to bed hungry at night. We are a better nation than that. We are a better people than that. We are a better Senate than that.

I hope my colleagues will join me in saying that, in America, the hungry will be fed.

Mr. SANTORUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank the Chair. First, let me say, Mr. President, that we have had votes on block grants here in the Senate in the past. We had one on the bill last year. In fact, when it came out of the Agriculture Committee, there was no block grant. The block grant was offered here on the floor of the Senate and was passed in the Senate. It was included in the welfare reform bill that was passed here in the Senate. It was included in the bill that passed originally, as I said before, in the Senate, which passed 87 to 12. The Senator from North Dakota voted for that, as well as other provisions in the bill. The block grant included in the Senate bill——

Mr. CONRAD. If the Senator will yield, I would like to correct the RECORD. The Senator from North Dakota did not vote for the block grant. The Senator from North Dakota voted against the block grant. But when a Senator is presented with the question of supporting the overall bill, that is a different question.

Mr. SANTORUM. It was included in the Senate bill, which passed 87 to 12 here, in the reconciliation bill, and in the welfare bill that was vetoed by the President. In fact, the block grant provision that is in this bill actually has a lot higher hurdles for States to jump over to get a block grant, because in the bill that originally came through here, there was a requirement in the original Senate bill that 85 percent of the money be spent on food.

In this bill, 94 percent of the money has to be spent on food stamp aid. So States have a higher requirement. In this bill, you can get a block grant only if you have EBT, electronic benefits transfer, a computerized way of providing food stamps. In the other bill, there was no such electronic benefits transfer.

In this bill, you have to meet one of these criteria to get in. An error rate of under 6 percent. The national error rate is between 9 and 10 percent. So you have to have a pretty good error rate to be able to qualify for a block grant. There are only a few States who qualify—Massachusetts, Alabama, Kentucky, Arkansas, Louisiana, South Dakota, and the Virgin Islands. Maryland, Texas, and South Carolina qualify for electronic benefits transfer. If you have an error rate above 6 percent, you have to use State dollars to, in fact, pay down the error rate to make up the difference—obviously, an expense of the States.

So we have a much higher standard here of qualifying, and the standard is set for the purpose of making sure that the States that do take a block grant either have a technologically advanced program like electronic benefits transfer, where you get the debit card instead of the stamps, which you then use to purchase your food, or you have a good system which has a low error rate. I think when you consider the fact that only 7 jurisdictions out of the 50-some that we have receiving these programs have such a low error rate, I think we have set the standard pretty high here. So this is not an easy thing that lots of States are going to jump into. Most States will not qualify for these block grants. So we believe we have set an appropriate standard.

The Senator from South Dakota talked about the Florida rate and how it was going along at a nice rate, and then jumped up, and they got caught and they were stuck. Well, as the Senator from North Dakota knows, they are not stuck. Under this bill, as under the previous block grant proposals, the Governor and legislature of Florida can opt in, but they can also opt out. It is a one-time thing. You stay in, or when you go out, you are out forever. If they do not want to swim in the pond and do not like the water temperature, they can get out. They would have to sit on the beach and watch. They had their chance to swim. We think that is fair and that gives an adequate chance for States who run into difficult situations.

This is certainly a safety valve for a State that might find itself in some sort of cataclysmic situation. The other things we allow States to do, which is positive, is to take the money that they have had—I cannot see the exact years on the chart, but say they had 3 or 4 good years, where it was perking along at a low rate, and because we have given them a block grant, they do not have to comply with all the bells and whistles that we require in Washington; they can run their own program. As most Governors told me, they can run it a heck of a lot more efficiently than we make them run it out of Washington. So let us assume—and I do not think it is unreasonable to assume this—if the food stamp rate stays the same and we are giving increases in funding, then they would be able to save money. We allow them to keep up to 10 percent of the total amount that they—I will rephrase that. If they do not spend all of the money that has been allocated to them in the block grant, and they spend, let us say 95 percent of it, well, the 5 percent they do not spend they can put in a fund and carry it over. They can carry over up to 10 percent every year, and up to 30 percent of an annual allocation, which means they can have a rainy day fund here to take care of situations where you have that little spike because of a hurricane or something like that. That is what prudent State planners should do when it comes to these kinds of programs. We provide for that in this bill.

So we think that there are adequate safeguards there for these kinds of spikes in benefits. The Senator also said there is no maintenance of effort provision. Under the current Food Stamp Program, 50 percent of the administrative costs are paid for by the Federal Government, and 50 percent are paid for by the State government.

They said we do not require them to maintain their effort; in other words, require them to pick up 50 percent of the cost. That is true and it is not true. Specifically, do we require them to pick up the effort? No. But what we say, as I referred to earlier, is that now 94 percent of the money they get must go for food stamps; 6 percent is administrative. What is the average administrative cost for the Food Stamp Program today? Coincidentally, 12 percent. What does that mean? That means that 6 percent now is going to be federally funded. That is the 6 percent you can use for administrative costs, and, if they want to continue their spending at a rate of 12 percent for administrative costs, who is going to pick up the other 6 percent? The State with State funds. No, we do not specifically say you have to maintain effort. But we give you only half of the money you would normally use to administer the program. So, if they can do a better job administering the program, if they get from 12 percent down to 10 percent, we say you can keep the savings, and you can use State dollars for the savings.

I do not think that is a bad thing. I think if they can reduce their administrative costs they should get the benefit of reducing those costs.

So we have set up a system that says we want to give you the opportunity, if you think you can run this program better than we can, if you think you can feed more people, if you think you can do it more efficiently, we are going to give you the opportunity. When you do that, you have to submit a plan to HHS. They have to get approval. You have to say in that plan how you are going to serve a specific population. As you know, when we submit plans here, as we had this discussion earlier today about getting waivers approved by the Department of Health and Human Services, that is not an easy thing to do sometimes.

So we put hurdles in place to make sure that these plans are adequate to serve the needs of hungry people in the respective States, and we require them to maintain a quality control program, and, frankly, you know that just makes sense. So we have adequate controls in there to make sure this is a good plan for the people of the State. We give them the option to do it. If they have a bad year, or some doom on the horizon, they can get out. So we give them the flexibility to get out. We give them the opportunity to save money on administrative costs by putting in a better system, and we set standards so they have to either be technologically advanced like an EBT system—that is a much more efficient system to get into this program in the first place—or they have to have lower error rates, which means they have to have a well-run program to get in here.

So, I believe we have come up with a plan here that provides adequate safeguards for the hungry in those respective States, gives States an incentive to be innovative, to be efficient, to provide actually more and better food services to the people in their State, and in the end provide the safety valve for States that might find themselves in the situation which Florida found themselves in with an escape hatch, a one-time escape hatch in the bill.

So, I think what this bill has done is it has taken what was—frankly, no offense to the author—a relatively crude Food Stamp Block Program that was offered here on the floor and has been refined through conference because some of these cases are made in the conference bill, and additionally refined by the Agriculture Committee, which the Senator from North Dakota and I both sit on. As you know, excellent work comes out of that committee. We have refined it, and now we are at the point where I suggest we have a fairly solid, responsible program that is going to be limited in impact because of the limitation of States and their ability to get in here and have adequate safeguards to make sure that not only people who are in this program are fed, but that States that run into problems can get out.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, our colleague from Pennsylvania has not only misplaced me by putting me in South Dakota—I represent North Dakota——

Mr. SANTORUM. I apologize. I am sorry.

Mr. CONRAD. But also misplacing his argument as well. The simple reality is Florida did not get advance notice of Hurricane Andrew. Nobody called up the Governor and said, when he would have had to make the decision under this bill to opt in and take the block grant that, "Hey, Governor, 9 months from now you are going to be hit by a hurricane." You know, if the Governor would have looked back to the pattern back in 1987 to 1989, any Governor might have concluded it is a safe bet to go with a block grant.

The problem is people do not have advance notice of an economic downturn. That is what happened here. They do not have advance notice of an actual disaster. That is what happened here. All the opt in and opt out would not have done them a bit of good in Florida. When these hungry people showed up, these were not people who have been on the welfare rolls for 10 years, these were not people who did not work. These are people who were hit by a natural disaster and needed food. The State of Florida would not have been able to provide it under a block grant.

Is that what we want to do in this country? I think not.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONRAD. Let me conclude.

We want a plan and a program that is going to assure us, as the Food Stamp Program does now, that if people are hungry, if they have been hit by a sharp economic downturn and a natural disaster, that they are going to have a chance to be fed.

Let me just say, with respect to the notion of opt in and opt out, that you have a one-time opt out here; one time. Does that mean Florida is never going to be hit by another natural disaster? Does that mean that Florida is never going to be hit again by an economic downturn?

Mr. President, this is not well-crafted. This is not well thought through. It goes right to the heart of the Food Stamp Program. More importantly, it goes right to the heart of the question in America: Are we going to make sure that hungry people are fed?

I am happy to yield.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, in response to the last assertion that Florida would not be hit by another natural disaster if Florida opts out of a block grant, in the Federal entitlement program they are covered under the existing Food Stamp Program.

I do not understand why the opt out is such a bad idea. The fact is that what you want to accomplish is to put them back into the main program.

Mr. CONRAD. If I may say to my colleague, the opt out is not just a bad idea. What is a bad idea is the opt in because once you have opted in you are stuck for that year. You are stuck. Florida would have been stuck. They would not have been able to feed these people who are hungry. The problem is the opt in.

That is what this amendment seeks to say. It says, "Look, we are not going to have a program that endangers children. We are not going to have a program that endangers people who are vulnerable."

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a circumstance in which we should all understand that half of the States are eligible immediately, I am told under this bill, to go under the Block Grant Program; 40 would be eligible within 2 years. This is not some narrow, finely crafted amendment. This is a wholesale assault on the Food Stamp Program. That is what this is.

I do not think that is what this Senate ought to be doing. I do not think that is what this Congress ought to be doing.

Further, there is no guarantee under this legislation that protects children who are now eligible. There is no individual guarantee to children in this legislation. And most serious of all, there is absolutely no protection for a State that is hit by a natural disaster or a sharp economic downturn. That is the reality of the underlying legislation.

I do not think we want to take that risk with America's kids. I do not think we want to take that risk with the States that may face something they are wholly unprepared for.

What is going to happen in California? What if California opted in and decided in July of a year that the next year they were going to be block granted? They are going to take a set amount of money for food stamps. And then California has the big one, has a huge earthquake, and millions of people are displaced and hungry, and they show up at Federal centers looking for food assistance. Are we really going to have a system that says that we are sorry, California is out of money; you just are going to have to go hungry, and maybe you can go over to Nevada and find some food over there?

This is not well thought through, this provision of block granting food stamps. We ought to make this change, the change that is contained in this amendment.

I say to my friend that he has established a new standard. The standard here is it is good because it passed the Senate sometime in the past, or that it is acceptable because it passed the Senate sometime in the past. That is a new standard. I do not think that is the standard we want to apply in judging whether or not legislation is well-crafted.

I am afraid all too often things that have passed this Chamber, perhaps even things that passed the other Chamber, are things that need a lot more work. And that is why we have offered this amendment on a bipartisan basis.

Mr. SANTORUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, from the numbers that I have, I have four States that would be eligible for block grant under the EBT provision, seven States would be under the error rate of under 6 percent. That is out of 53 jurisdictions that are eligible for the program. So I have 11 jurisdictions of 53 that would be eligible today, not 40.

Now, I will say that all 53 jurisdictions are eligible, if the States are willing to pay down the error rate. That would be unlikely, we suspect, for any jurisdiction that would want to put up money, State money in advance to get a Federal block grant. So what we are looking at here is 11 States today.

Now, the Senator from North Dakota may be anticipating a lot more States going on with electronic benefits transfer, and I know that is being worked on in several States, but as we speak right now we are looking at 11 jurisdictions. So this is not opening the floodgates by any stretch of the imagination.

What the Senator also has talked about is the State of Florida being stuck if, in fact, they get hit with a bad economy and on top of that, in the case of Florida, a natural disaster.

I suggest that if the Senator from North Dakota looks at his chart, he will see several—I cannot tell the months or years, but an extended period of time where the rate did not go up, the number of people on food stamps did not go up. As I said before, under our program, States would be able to save a portion of the money, up to 10 percent of the annual block grant, and let it go into next year. So they could build up a rainy day fund or a reserve fund for bad times.

Now, if you look at the Florida example, and let us say Florida is one of those States that is a little skittish and wanted to get out, before Hurricane Andrew there looked to be a substantial period of time where benefits were increasing fairly dramatically prior to the hurricane. So they certainly would have had ample notice of a rising food stamp roll and been able to get out, if they were concerned, well before the hurricane.

That is just using Florida's example. They would have been able to get out during the period of economic downturn, but I think what is more important is that they are able to plan for this by taking the good times—and we have, as in most capitalist economies, economic business cycles. During the good times, they can save some money, and during the bad times, they can draw down that surplus.

The Senator from North Dakota also indicated that they would not be able to pay these people benefits; they would run out of money. Well, the Senator knows that hurricane, I think, occurred sometime in the summer, which is only halfway through the year.

At that point, they still have half the block grant left. They could move that funding forward and fill that need and then come in at the end, I would suspect, with State dollars to make sure they get to the end of the year. The State can always put up their own money to fill the need and, in fact, having created a plan which creates an entitlement for food stamps, they would be required to come up with their own money. Then they have to make the decision, as I said before, whether they want to continue a program that puts them at some sort of risk. My feeling is that is a decision for the States to make.

But to suggest that the State will have no money to pay people food stamps is just not accurate. They will have the money. It will be their own money, not the block grant. But that is the choice they make. The Governors and State legislators are not stupid. They know there are good times and there are bad times, there are natural disasters, and on balance they are going to make a decision that they can run a program so much better than we let them run it today that, given all these exigencies, and they know they exist, they are going to run a better program and save money in the process.

That is a decision we leave up to them to make. We trust the Governors in the State. We trust State legislators to be able to sit down and rationally come up with a decision, that they want to take responsibility for this because they can do it better and serve the needs of their people better. I want to give people the option to do it, but there are sufficient safeguards that they have a good program to start, which is why these hurdles are in place, and that they have a good plan and that they implement it, which is why we require HHS approval. And if they screw up, frankly, they have a chance to get out.

So we make them have a good plan to start. We require them to submit a good plan to continue, and if they end up having a lousy plan, they can get out. That, to me, is as well thought out as you can possibly get and is as flexible as you can possibly get for an opportunity for States to take control of this very important program that feeds millions of people.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CONRAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. CONRAD. The problem with the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania is that it is wholly focused on what is in the interest of the State government. What he forgets about is who we are trying to serve here. We are talking about hungry people. He is worried about what happens to the structure of the State government. I am worried about what happens to the people who are hungry in that State if the State officials make this mistake.

Let us go back to the example of Florida. From 1987 to 1989, their caseload was flat. Then they had economic downturn and the caseload started to explode. They did not have advance warning of an economic downturn. More clearly, they did not have warning of what happened here where we see the spike in demand for food aid for people caused by a natural disaster. They would have had to make the decision to go to the block grant under this proposal back here in July of the previous year.

Now, unless they were prophetic, they might have thought if they had a pattern like they saw back in 1987 to 1989, it was safe to take a block grant. But then if they would have had a natural disaster like Andrew, what would have happened to the people who were hungry that lined up for help? The Senator says, well, the State could have put in their money. That is at the very time the State is having to put their money into every other part of this disaster.

You go find out about the budget of the State of Florida during this period. They were under enormous stress because of the combination of economic downturn and natural disaster. That is the very time this underlying bill would say: State, come up with some more money.

That is a dream. That is not connected to reality. That is a wish. That is a hope. People cannot eat wishes and hopes. People need food when they are hungry. This, to me, is one of those circumstances where we have before us a proposal that does not meet the needs of the people. I am not so worried about the State government. I am worried about the people who in my State or any other State would be denied food because of an economic downturn or a natural disaster that was unforeseen, unpredicted, and the State bet the farm that nothing bad was going to happen.

How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANTORUM). Twenty-nine minutes.

Mr. CONRAD. I yield whatever time the Senator from Vermont desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I rise to urge my colleagues to join Senator CONRAD, myself, and our cosponsors in supporting the amendment to remove the optional block grant from the welfare bill.

I have three major objections to block granting the Food Stamp Program. First, I am very concerned about the opportunity for fraud if we turn the Food Stamp Program over to the States. Second, I am fearful that a food stamp block grant could put our most vulnerable populations at risk. Finally, I believe the bill as crafted proposes a solid program that will afford the States a great deal of flexibility without irretrievably compromising our national nutritional safety net. I think the program proposed in the bill should be given an opportunity to prove itself.

Under current food stamp law, the USDA operates a sophisticated computer system that identifies suspicious food stamp redemption patterns. Federal undercover agents visit the suspicious stores and gather evidence of illegal activity. If food stamps are converted to a block grant, much of this responsibility will shift to the States. Few States will be able to match the antifraud capabilities and resources of this Federal operation. Although I understand the States' desire for greater flexibility, we know that at this time only a handful have developed an electronic system that could provide the assurances of fraud prevention that we have at the Federal level. In this time of quickly diminishing Federal resources, I am reluctant to sacrifice the efficiencies and success of the program that the Department of Agriculture has developed.

Next, let me share my concern that the optional food stamp block grant would end the assurance of a nutritional safety net under the Nation's poor—particularly its children. Poor families and elderly individuals would be left at serious risk during economic downturns in States opting for the block grant. The block grant fails to provide any adjustment during a recession for increases in unemployment and poverty. States also would receive no additional funds in the event that food prices rise unexpectedly. States would be forced to curtail eligibility and benefits during these times. Unemployed workers who need food stamps temporarily could end up on a waiting list—depriving their families of critical food assistance. After unemployment compensation, the Food Stamp Program is the Nation's principle countercyclical tool to respond to recessions.

Block granting the Food Stamp Program puts children at risk. Preserving national standards for food stamps takes on even greater importance if the AFDC Program is converted to a block grant since no poor child is assured of receiving cash assistance under an AFDC block grant. Maintaining the National Food Stamp Program at least guarantees that a food assistance safety net of last resort is in place for poor children. Given this very great risk, I frankly am not sure why a State would choose a block grant, nonetheless it is possible a State would, and I fear its poorest citizens could end up suffering the consequences.

Finally, I believe there is no reason for a State to choose a block grant—the welfare bill as drafted gives the States unprecedented flexibility to run their own food stamp programs without a block grant.

Under this reform bill:

States get flexibility to set their own food stamp benefit rules for families that receive AFDC. If they choose, States could drop many of the rules that now apply to families, and then substitute their own rules—without securing a waiver. States also may integrate food stamp and cash assistance benefit eligibility as they see fit. States have asked for a long time for this flexibility, and the bill as drafted gives it to them.

States can convert food stamp benefits to wage subsidies provided to employers. In other words, States may require food stamp recipients in wage subsidy projects to work for wages rather than food stamps. Again, this is something many States have asked for, and the bill as drafted gives it to them.

States have the flexibility to disqualify custodial parents who do not cooperate with efforts to establish paternity or child support orders. States may also disqualify absent parents who fail to make their child support payments.

States are freed from federally imposed administrative requirements. The bill lifts an array of Federal requirements regarding food stamp application forms, the application process, and how States should coordinate with other assistance programs would be removed. States can make their own decisions on how to administer their food stamp programs. This is flexibility the States asked for, and the bill gives it to them.

I have listed four ways that this bill provides much greater flexibility to the States than they have ever had in the Food Stamp Program—and there are many more provisions in the bill that give the States the flexibility they have asked for with regard to the Food Stamp Program.

For the reasons described above, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this amendment to remove the optional block grant from the bill.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this amendment to strike the optional food stamp block grant. This bill provides States ample flexibility to develop their food assistance programs without a block grant structure. We should not place minimum national eligibility and benefit floors for this important food assistance safety net at risk in an effort to provide States with even more flexibility.

Maintaining the national standards for food stamps is particularly important under this bill. Children and their families may lose cash assistance under the welfare block grant—even if parents are unable to find work. The National Food Stamp Program ensures that a basic food assistance safety net is still available to these families and prevents children from being at risk for unmet nutritional needs. If we are going to cut funding for cash assistance and block-grant the welfare program, we need to be very conscious of the changes we make to other safety-net programs that also serve poor Americans.

Block grants will place both States and food stamp beneficiaries at risk. These block grants would not adjust for increases in unemployment or poverty, or unexpected increases in food prices. States would need to stretch their block grant dollars by providing fewer benefits to each enrollee under these circumstances—or they may be forced to cut eligibility.

States do not need an optional food stamp block grant. This bill provides States with substantial new flexibility to design their food stamp programs. For example:

States could largely develop their own food stamp benefit rules and they may integrate the food stamp eligibility process with welfare.

Federal requirements for employment and training programs related to food stamp eligibility would be repealed—States could design these programs as they choose.

States could convert food stamp benefits to wage subsidies.

Federal rules that make electronic benefit systems difficult to implement would be repealed, while Federal requirements for food stamp applications, coordination with other safety-net programs, and other administrative rules would also be deleted.

These are significant changes to the current Food Stamp Program. States will be better able to design and administer their programs using innovative approaches to promoting work and self-sufficiency for food stamp beneficiaries. We should not also establish a food stamp block grant, thereby eliminating the national floor for eligibility and benefits, thereby threatening low-income children and their families.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in voting for this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANTORUM). The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, just a couple of quick additional points so we can, hopefully, persuade the occupant of the chair of the wisdom of this amendment. I think he is perhaps right on the brink, now, of coming over to our side. If we can just provide him some additional information, he will come to our side on this argument.

The Senator from Pennsylvania was indicating that just a handful of States would be eligible. That strikes me as an indication of the weakness of their argument. If the argument is this underlying bill is not so bad because only a handful of States can qualify, that does not speak very well of the position in the legislation. The fact is, not a handful of States qualify; every State can qualify. Every State can qualify. Every State could be in a position of not meeting the needs of hungry people at the time of economic recession or natural disaster.

The facts I have suggest that about half the States now could take block grant with no cost. Others could come in by paying a small cost. But within 2 or 3 years, nearly 40 States would be in a position to be in the block grant at no cost. In addition to that, with respect to what happens to participation rates during a recession, I have a chart that shows what has happened in various States during an economic downturn, during the period of 1989 to 1992, when the country was in a recession.

Nevada's participation rate went up over 90 percent; Florida's rate went up over 100 percent; Delaware's rate went up over 70 percent; Vermont's rate went up nearly 60 percent. These are not things that a State does a very good job of forecasting. They even do less well at forecasting natural disasters.

In my own State of North Dakota, we had a natural disaster back in 1988 and 1989. It was a drought. Nobody forecasted the drought was coming. Out of the blue we have a drought. All of a sudden our participation rates jumped, and not just in food stamps, but other programs as well. Food stamps are different because we are talking about hungry people. We are talking about preventing people who cannot get food from having some alternative that is humane.

The Florida example is just as clear as it can be. You have to opt in the year before. If they had opted in, they would have been stuck with the level of funding provided for in this block grant. If you look at it, in 1994, Florida, their actual money, because of the flexibility of the National Food Stamp Program—they got $1.4 billion. Under the block grant they would have gotten $440 million. That is a $1 billion hole that would have had to be filled in somewhere.

The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests they just take it out of other State money. What other State money? Every State I know budgets their money right up to the full ability of the State revenue sources to cover those expenditures. They may have a bit of a rainy day fund, but it is not enough to cover a natural disaster when the State is faced with expenditures for all manner of other requirements. They have to deal with roads. They have to deal with bridges. They have to deal with all kinds of other extraordinary expenses at the time of a natural disaster. The last thing we should have people worrying about is whether, in the midst of a natural disaster, hungry people are going to get fed. That is what this amendment addresses. I hope my colleagues will support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JEFFORDS). The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota keeps mentioning how, under this program, we are not worried about people who are in need of food. The very fact is, States must submit a plan to be approved by HHS to satisfy the Department of Health and Human Services of that very fact, whether we are going to meet the needs. In fact, we require them to specify how they are going to serve everybody, and specific populations.

To suggest we have not set up adequate safeguards to make sure, through these block grants, people will be adequately served is not reflective of what is actually in the legislation.

Second, you mentioned——

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. SANTORUM. Sure.

Mr. CONRAD. I ask my colleague, what in the State plan enables it to deal with a natural disaster like Hurricane Andrew? The State plan has the States setting out what they are going to do with the resources that they have under the block grant. When they are hit with a natural disaster and the need skyrockets, they are not given any more money. What good does the plan do that does not anticipate this disaster? Obviously, they would not be taking the option of going to the block grant if they were anticipating it, so clearly it would not be in their plan.

Mr. SANTORUM. To answer your question, as the Senator from North Dakota knows, the State of Florida during the time of Hurricane Andrew was eligible for disaster assistance, and that covers a variety of things. Having just gone through that in Pennsylvania, a substantial amount of disaster assistance was funneled through the Department of Agriculture, and, in fact, there are programs available for people to meet some of the needs that are there during the time of disaster.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANTORUM. We are not attempting nor would I recommend we block grant emergency assistance. So you keep pointing back to one State in one instance and draw a bad case for that. It would be—I am not arguing there would not be a severe strain. But I suggest the Governor of Florida and the State Legislature of Florida knows that occasionally they are hit by hurricanes. It is not like these hurricanes are just, "Gee, wow, in Florida we had a hurricane. We never see that." They see them all the time and they know they can be disastrous, and that should go into their calculation whether they want to go into this in the first place.

We are assuming, and I think it is a good assumption, that the Governor and the State legislature are not going to take on this enormous responsibility without having thought through what the different consequences would be, given natural disasters or given economic downturn, and a whole lot of other things.

We believe that there still will be States out there that, because of the enormous burden that the Federal Government forces upon them with this program that drives up costs for them and makes their program inefficient, can take the money and take the risk and still do a better job, and they are willing to assume that risk.

They do so with eyes open wide. If their eyes were not open, they certainly are open now as a result of our discussion. That if they do not have the money, if they have an economic downturn or disaster, they have to come up with their own State money.

I will announce to State Governors now, if you take a block grant under this proposal and run out of money at the end of the year, it is your responsibility. Now everybody has been warned, and they are going to have to make a decision based on what they think is the best thing to do.

I think what this whole welfare reform bill is about is trying to get away from the paternalism of the Federal Government and the inefficiency of the Federal Government in trying to micromanage programs out of Washington, DC, for Fargo, ND, and other places. What we are trying to do here is assure, to the extent we can, that States that get involved have good programs. We make sure they have low error rates or high technology to run an efficient system.

We ensure that when they take the program, after they now run a good program, that when they opt for a block grant, which is to cut the ties to the Federal program, in fact, take it and let them run it themselves, that they have to submit a plan, which adequately covers all the people we are concerned about, and is approved by HHS. Again, a prudent step to making sure they are not taking the money and spending it on a fleet of Volvos for all the Cabinet Secretaries; that, in fact they are spending it on helping the poor who need food.

We have adequate safeguards in here to make sure that the poor who are in need of food assistance get it; that the States run a good operation. We have those safeguards in place.

One other thing. The Senator from North Dakota voted for in committee and supported in committee an amendment that was put forward by the Senator from Vermont, the ranking member, Senator LEAHY, as a further, frankly, disincentive for these States to take a block grant.

Under the old formula, States could either take the 1994 allocation for food stamps or the average of 1992, 1993, and 1994. Senator LEAHY, and others on your side of the aisle, were saying, "Gee, well, with the reductions in food stamp benefits under our bill, that may be a very attractive thing for them to take—take that high figure, since our numbers are going to be coming down."

So what you added in committee was a provision that said that in no case could either the 1992, 1993, 1994 average or 1994 allocation be higher than the 1997 levels after the reforms have been put in place. So you make it even less tantalizing to go ahead and take a block grant.

All I suggest is, we spent a lot of time on this amendment. It has been a good debate and discussion. I hope those who were listening are still listening after an hour of this debate. I think it has been informative. I think what we have seen here is we set very high hurdles; we have not made this to be the most attractive block grant proposal out there. What we have said to States is, "If you think you can do it better, given these high hurdles to get into this program, we are going to give you the opportunity to do it."

I think that is only fair to give States the opportunity to run a better program that helps the people in their State.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAIG). The Senator has 17 minutes 5 seconds remaining.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania with respect to a natural disaster reveals the weakness of his argument. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests, if you have a natural disaster and you are stuck with this block grant program that provides only a set amount of money, it cannot be adjusted for the magnitude of the disaster, that, well, you have economic assistance.

Economic assistance is not for food assistance, that is why we have the Food Stamp Program. Economic assistance is to meet the other disaster needs that a State meets in a circumstance of unforeseen natural disaster. Economic assistance programs are not designed to replace the Food Stamp Program.

Mr. President, if that is what he is suggesting is out there for people to be counting on, if they face a natural disaster, those people are going to be in a world of hurt.

I might also say, the notion that Governors are put on notice because we in the Senate have a debate at 3 o'clock in the afternoon on Friday is probably not a very reliable thing for any of us to depend upon. I doubt if any Governor is watching this debate or paying very close attention to what goes on in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. SANTORUM. I will be happy to send each Governor a copy of this debate so they will be fully informed as to what they are getting into.

Mr. CONRAD. I welcome that. No question, they will be riveted by the comments of the two of us this afternoon.

Let me just end on this note. The harsh reality is, if a State opts into this block grant—and we go back to the example of Florida, but we do not need Florida's example, we could take dozens of examples of what has happened to States in times of economic downturn or natural disaster—what we would find, without exception, is that these things are unpredictable; that if a State had opted into the block grant, taken a flat amount of money to provide for the food needs of its people and then have something unforeseen occur, whether it was an economic downturn, a drought, a hurricane, an earthquake, they only have that set amount of money, no matter what the need is.

What happens to those people? What would have happened to hungry people in Florida if there was not the automatic adjustment provided by the Federal Food Stamp Program? I can tell you what would have happened. The State of Florida would have been presented with an impossible choice: meet the other disaster needs of the State in that circumstance or divert money to food which would have otherwise been provided for with the Federal Food Stamp Program.

What a hellacious choice to present the State officials of Florida or the State officials of Pennsylvania. They have had natural disasters. They just had one. Or the State of North Dakota, or the State of California. We saw California beset by one disaster after another. We saw them have landslides, fires, earthquakes all in 1 year. Their caseload skyrocketed. But if they would have had a set amount of money for food stamps, some people who had legitimate needs would not have been served.

Mr. President, America is better than that. America is better than that. This Senate is better than that. When there is a disaster, we have a spirit of neighborliness in this country and we go to help out. When there was a disaster in Pennsylvania, the Federal Government helped out. When there was a disaster in my State, the people of America rallied, through their Federal Government, and helped us, and it made a difference in people's lives.

This bill, as it is written, is just a mistake. We should not leave a circumstance in which people who are hungry do not have the opportunity to be fed.

This amendment, which is a bipartisan amendment, addresses that need. I hope my colleagues will support it.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of our time.

Mr. CONRAD. I yield back the balance of our time.

AMENDMENT NO. 4935

(Purpose: To deny welfare benefits to individuals convicted of illegal drug possession, use or distribution)

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator GRAMM of Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SANTORUM] for Mr. GRAMM proposes an amendment numbered 4935.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 364, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following new section:

SEC. . DENIAL OF BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN DRUG RELATED CONVICTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—An individual convicted (under Federal or State law) of any crime relating to the illegal possession, use, or distribution of a drug shall not be eligible for any Federal means-tested public benefit, as defined in Section 2403(c)(1) of this Act.

(b) FAMILY MEMBERS EXEMPT.—The prohibition contained under subsection (a) shall not apply to the family members or dependants of the convicted individual in a manner that would make such family members or dependents ineligible for welfare benefits that they would otherwise be eligible for. Any benefits provided to family members or dependents of a person described in subsection (a) shall be reduced by the amount which would have otherwise been made available to the convicted individual.

(c) PERIOD OF PROHIBITION.—The prohibition under subsection (a) shall apply—

(1) with respect to an individual convicted of a misdemeanor, during the 5-year period beginning on the date of the conviction or the 5-year period beginning on January 1, 1997, whichever is later; and

(2) with respect to an individual convicted of a felony, for the duration of the life of that individual.

(d) EXCEPTIONS.—Subsection (a) shall not apply with respect to the following Federal benefits:

(1) Emergency medical services under title XV or XIX of the Social Security Act.

(2) Short-term, non-cash, in-kind emergency disaster relief.

(3)(A) Public health assistance for immunizations.

(B) Public health assistance for testing and treatment of communicable diseases if the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines that it is necessary to prevent the spread of such disease.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The denial of Federal benefits set forth in this section shall take effect for convictions occurring after the date of enactment.

(f) REGULATIONS.—Not later than December 31, 1996, the Attorney General shall promulgate regulations detailing the means by which Federal and State agencies, courts, and law enforcement agencies will exchange and share the data and information necessary to implement and enforce the withholding of Federal benefits.

Mr. SANTORUM. This amendment, to my understanding, is an amendment that says that if you are convicted of a Federal drug crime, that if it is a misdemeanor crime you are ineligible for a means-tested benefit for 5 years, if it is a felony you are ineligible permanently. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

AMENDMENT NO. 4903

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator EXON, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered and withdrawn by the Senator from Washington, Senator MURRAY, remain on the list of amendments that are in order to offer today or Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I am going to be offering an amendment prior to that. I also ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I am going to offer be subject to modification prior to the time of the vote on Tuesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President.

AMENDMENT NO. 4936

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, if there is one phrase that has characterized the debate on welfare reform, it is the phrase that "we are going to end welfare as we have known it." What we have known welfare as has a number of dimensions. We have focused a great deal of attention, for instance, on the issue of what will it take to cause welfare to be seen as a temporary program, not as a permanent lifestyle.

There is another dimension to welfare as we have known it. And that is how the Federal Government has participated financially with the States in financing the cost of welfare. And I speak specifically to the cash payments under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

The current law is essentially a matching formula in which the States indicate what they are prepared to commit to this program and then the Federal Government matches that amount. There are nuances to that statement but that is fundamentally the status quo.

This bill, with a minor modification, intends to retain that aspect of welfare as we have known it. That is, we would continue to maintain the State by State Federal allocations as they have developed under the current system. And those State by State allocations, as you would imagine, are extremely divergent.

As an example, to use the State of the Presiding Officer, Idaho, in 1996, per child in poverty—that is of all the children in Idaho who live at or below the poverty level—if you divide the number of dollars that are coming from the Federal Government to the State of Idaho by that number of children, the result is $495. That is what Idaho receives per poor child.

Just to move across the line into your adjoining State of Washington, the State of Washington, with the same mathematical formula, in 1996 will receive $1,948 or approximately four to five times, per child in poverty, what Idaho receives.

That result is now going to be cast into the stone of block grants. That is the basis upon which Idaho will be receiving its money between now and the year 2001 so that essentially those same discrepancies will be maintained.

What has not been retained, however, Mr. President, is what is the purpose of the allocation of funds. Under the current system, the purpose of the allocation of funds from the Federal Government to the States and into the eligible families is essentially economic support. It pays for the rent, the lights, the food, the school supplies, the diapers, all the things that a family needs.

What we are now about to do is shift to a different goal. And that different goal is to, yes, continue to provide some economic support, but with a heavy emphasis on funding those activities which will facilitate people getting off of welfare and into work.

What are those kinds of activities that are now going to be funded? Well, they include job training. They include child care. They include some of the support services such as transportation for people to get to the job training or to get to the job. Those types of expenditures, within a range, tend to be fairly consistent from State to State.

It does not cost a great deal less or more to provide that set of services in Moscow, ID, as in Spokane, WA. Yet Washington is going to have four to five times as many dollars per child in poverty to pay for those services as is Idaho. Therefore, Idaho is going to have a much more difficult time financially in terms of being able to pay for those kinds of transitional services and have anything left over to cover the economic needs of families who are in poverty than will States that commence this process at a much higher level.

That, Mr. President, is the preface for the amendment that is offered today by Senator BUMPERS and myself entitled "Children's Fair Share." And our premise is that we ought to, over time, have as a national goal to treat each child in poverty in America as being of equal worth, and equal dignity and equal importance to their opportunities for the future of our Nation.

Our approach is a simple one. Rather than take the status quo, which is predicated on the old welfare system and the old objectives, we should focus on a needs-based formula. As a result, over time, States would receive funding based on the number of poor children in their State.

Why are Senator BUMPERS and I offering this amendment? Any formula allocation should be guided by some underlying principles and policy justifications. One fundamental principle is fairness—fairness to America's children, fairness to the States, fairness to the Nation. If we are going to block grant welfare, we must be very careful that we are block granting with fairness.

The General Accounting Office issued a report in February 1995 entitled, "Block Grants: Characteristics, Experience, and Lessons Learned." What are the lessons that have been learned from our previous history with block grants that we should take into account as we start on the block grant for welfare?

The General Accounting Office report stated, "Because initial funding allocations used in current block grants were based on prior categorical grants, they were not necessarily equitable." That, Mr. President, describes the circumstance that we face this afternoon with this legislation—inequitable allocations of block grant funds because they were based on prior categorical grants.

Senator BUMPERS and I propose a funding formula that would clearly meet the following principles. First, block grant funding should reflect need or the number of persons in the individual States that would need assistance. Think about that principle, that one that seems rational.

Second, a State's access to Federal funding should increase if the number of people in need of assistance increases; conversely, a State's access to Federal funding should decrease if the number of people in need of that assistance decrease. Does that sound logical and reasonable?

Third, States should not be permanently disadvantaged because of the old categorical policies. In this case, the policies and circumstances surrounding welfare as we have known it, which we are attempting to discard.

Fourth, if requirements and penalties are to be imposed upon the States, as envisaged by this bill, then fairness dictates that all States have an equitable and reasonable chance of reaching those goals.

Mr. President, I suggest these principles sound rather simple. In sharp contrast, the legislation which is before the Senate fails to meet these tests of fairness. In fact, the formula used in this bill would perpetuate inequities into the future. Those inequities would, in fact, grow.

Let me give an example. I cited the example of two neighboring States, Idaho and Washington. Let me cite two neighboring jurisdictions, the District of Columbia and the State of Virginia. Today, the District of Columbia per child in poverty receives $1,611; in the State of Virginia, $728. That is what the situation is today.

Now, what is the proposal of the underlying bill for the year 2001? Are we going to bring these together? Are we going to move toward eliminating the $680 difference between the District of Columbia and the State of Virginia? Unfortunately, it is just the opposite, Mr. President. In the year 2001, under the plan that is before the Senate, the District of Columbia will receive $1,752 per child in poverty; the State of Virginia will receive $748. Rather than closing toward fairness, we will see a widening in which, in the year 2001, the District of Columbia will have approximately $1,000 more per child in poverty than does the State of Virginia. I find it hard to think of a policy rationale that would justify such a result.

Mr. President, ironically, in the name of reform, in the name of change, we are locking in past inequities, repackaging them as block grants and failing to take into account future populations or economic changes among the States, failing to take into account the very obligations we are about to give to the States to perform and the necessity that if all States are going to achieve those objectives and if all States are going to be held to both sanctions and rewards for their success or failure in achieving those objectives, that all States should commence this new adventure of welfare reform from an essentially equitable position.

By allocating future spending on the basis of 1995 allocations, this bill fails to distribute money based on any measure of need. It fails to take into account population growth or economic changes. It would permanently disadvantage States well into the future based upon choices and circumstances of 1995. It would unfairly impose penalties on States.

The formula in this welfare bill would result in extreme disparities between States in Federal funding for poor children. I have given four examples to date. I might say all of these examples and all of the statistics I am using are the product of a report done by the Congressional Research Service dated July 18, 1996.

In this report, it points out that under the underlying bill the State of our leader, the State of Mississippi, would receive $355 per child in poverty, while the State of New York would receive $1,998, or almost six times more than the poor child in Mississippi. In fact, if we combine the amount per poor child in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Texas, the total of funds per poor child in those five States would not equal what a poor child, for instance, in the State of Massachusetts would receive. To put it another way, the Federal Government effectively values some poor children five times more than it does children in the State of Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Texas.

That is not the end of it, Mr. President, because under this bill, States that fail to meet the work requirements, States that are not able to put the money into effective job training, job search, job placement, child care, transportation, the other activities that have been found as necessary in order to get people from welfare to work, they are going to be subject to a penalty.

Now, in a previous version of this bill, that penalty was 5 percent of the State's grant. So if the State was going to receive $1 million, it would be penalized 5 percent if it failed to meet the work requirement. This bill, Mr. President, if we believe it, makes that 5 percent cumulative, so that in the first year, you are penalized a percent; if you fail in the second year, you get penalized 10 percent; in the third year, you get penalized 15 percent, and so forth, up until you are penalized one quarter, or 25 percent of your State grant.

That is not the only penalty in this bill, Mr. President. The language goes so far as to say a State can be penalized up to 25 percent per quarter in terms of the allocation of grant funds.

Mr. President, today is a historic day. It is the opening of the centennial Olympics in Atlanta. Much of the world's focus for the next few days will be on Atlanta and on the Olympic events. I would liken this funding formula dilemma to a variation of one of the most celebrated contests in the Olympics. Let us say you have Dennis Mitchell and Gail Devers lined up at the start of the 100-meter dash. Then you have a less talented runner lined up 30 yards behind these two Olympic superstars. Then you have Senator BUMPERS—who, unfortunately could not join us this afternoon, but will make some remarks on Monday—and I, who have been assigned a position 200 yards behind these superstars. The gun goes off. Now, we are all going to be judged on whether we can reach the finish line in the 100-meter dash in under 11 seconds. If you do, you get the acclaim of the crowd and you may even get a medal. If not, you are subject to penalty.

Well, not surprisingly, Dennis and Gail reach that goal easily. The runner that started 30 meters further behind makes it in about 13 or 14 seconds, failing to meet the goal despite a valiant attempt. Now, Senator BUMPERS and I, I hate to admit, we do not even come close to making the goal. Even Michael Johnson, the world-record holder, can only run the 200-meter dash in 19.66 seconds. However, even he would be penalized in this scenario. That would be a travesty of the Olympic spirit. That would be a sad race to observe.

But, Mr. President, it gets worse. Since Senator BUMPERS and I lost the race, and the runner at 130 yards also failed to meet the standard, we would have to move further back for the next race. Since they had reached the goal, Dennis and Gail would move 10 meters closer for the next race.

That is essentially the structure of this bill. Those who start out in an advantaged position are placed in the prospect that they will get rewards because they have achieved the goals. Those who start—as Senator BUMPERS and I are going to have to do—200 yards behind the regular starting line and therefore have relatively little expectation of reaching the goal, we are going to be further penalized, now having to be 300 yards behind the starting line.

That, Mr. President, is an absurd result. However, it is exactly the situation that our States must deal with if this bill passes with its combination of funding formulas, incentives, and penalties.

Mr. President, as we change welfare as we know it, we should recommit ourselves to the value that we place upon all of America's children. We should want to see that all of those children have the same opportunity to succeed and that they start from the same place in life's starting line. There is no justification for poor children to be treated with less or more value by the Federal Government depending upon in which State they happen to live.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the Graham-Bumpers amendment.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I will respond as to why. The Senator from Florida repeatedly talked about how those States that are currently disadvantaged that are way behind from the start are going to get put further behind, as if the States who were far behind were there—as I heard this term a lot on the floor—through "no fault of their own." I hear that all the time. They are disadvantaged for no fault of their own. The fact is that the reason they are so far behind is directly a result of the decisions that those States made with respect to how much money they want to put forward in State dollars to help the poor in their States.

If you look at the chart of the Senator from Florida, the majority of the States that are advantaged, according to him, by the current system are States like New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, California New Jersey—those States who have invested significant State dollars in AFDC, Medicaid, and a lot of other programs that are aimed at helping the poor. They are high-benefit States; they are States that are willing to spend tax dollars to meet a Federal match, to help the poor in their State. Therefore, they have a higher per capita spending rate on the poor than States like Florida, Texas, Arkansas, and the others.

So when it comes to them redoing the formulas in a block grant, we look at what States are spending now and what the Federal Government puts in now. What the Federal Government puts in now is based on what the State puts in. It is a match. So the Federal share, yes, in Pennsylvania is higher than it would be if you start all over and say we are going to pay so much for everybody. But, by doing what, you would take Pennsylvania and a program in Pennsylvania that has been established for a long time and has been supported by the State and just cut the legs out from under it to give it to a State who has not been providing those services in the past. How is that fair?

If you want to talk about fair, you have a State actually spending dollars, putting forth an effort and putting together a program they believe better meets the needs and is willing to spend money to help the poor, and you are going to create a block grant and take money away from them because they were being better neighbors—I will use that term. I do not think that is fair. The whole premise of the Hutchison formula—Senator HUTCHISON was the one who worked tirelessly, and I mean tirelessly, because there have been a lot of contentious issues I have dealt with in the area of welfare reform over the past 2 years. I do not want to use too strong of a term, but nothing approaches the animosity that is raised on an issue than when you are talking about dollars for the States back home. That is really where people draw the line.

So to be able to come up, as we have done, with a compromise formula that says we want to make sure no one is hurt, that no State is cut, that they are held harmless in the allocation they get from the Federal Government, and we set a separate growth fund for States that are hydro-States to give them money, a separate pot of money, $800 million, almost $1 billion, to use for growth. Florida gets over $100 million of the $800 million in that fund. We try to take care of both. For those who have been doing a good job, spending resources, taking care of the poor in their States, hold them harmless and, at the same time, provide for growth for the other States that, frankly, have not been meeting the national average when it comes to providing services for the poor.

We think that is a fair balance. If we had all the money in the world, we would give everything to everybody. But we do not. We do not have enough money to provide the same level for everybody that the State of New York, for example, provides for their beneficiaries. So we have to make, as the Senator from Florida, and I am sure everybody listening, realizes, you have to compromise. This was the compromise we came up with. Is it perfect? Absolutely not. Is it fair from an objective standpoint? I think the Senator from Florida can make the argument that, no, it is not fair. Is it fair given where we had to start? I make the argument that, yes, given the situation we found ourselves in, it is. If we were going to redo this and go back to 1965, instead of developing an AFDC Program, or whatever current revision of the AFDC Program was created, and start all over, would we have done it differently? Absolutely. But we are not there. We are here. We have a history of States that have invested. We have a history of programs. And to go in and just decimate those programs because of this block grant, I think would be tragic to a lot of people and a lot of States, and certainly it would be an enormous hardship on, frankly, the States that are having some of the very worst budgetary times and a lot of economic problems like in the Northeast, in the upper Midwest, and in the case of California and the west coast.

So we think what we have done here is a balance given where we had to start. It is not—and I agree with the Senator from Florida—from an objective position, as if we were starting from day one a fair solution. I will not argue that. But what I will argue is that given where we had to start, which is a long history of providing services to the poor, this is the best and the fairest we could come up with given those set of circumstances and the hand we were dealt.

So, I do not fault at all the Senator from Florida for standing up, as he has done not only on this bill but last year on several amendments, and articulately advocating for his State and for other States that do not get as much money as they think they deserve. He certainly has a right to do that, and he is certainly justified in doing that. I think what we have done here is to accommodate him and his State as best we can given the circumstances, in providing funds for them to be able to get some more resources.

I will anticipate the comment, which is that it is not enough. I cannot even argue that it is not enough. But what I am saying is you would find that the States like Pennsylvania and New York, which are not going to see any growth at all in their allocation, would tell me that is not enough. Nobody has enough. This is a situation where everyone is getting squeezed, and we are hoping that even though they are getting a smaller allocation, that they will be able to take this block grant and be able to redesign this program. That is what this is all about—giving them the flexibility. Yes, less money in a sense, but more flexibility to be able to design a program that more efficiently provides for the poor in their States, that more efficiently transitions people off welfare into productive lives than the current system does, which will save money if they do so in a proper fashion.

So, we think there is a good balance between enough money and certainly maximum flexibility to be able to accomplish the purpose without any additional money, or any change in the funding formulas here.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, let me just make a few points.

The Senator from Pennsylvania has made a very good argument, if we were going to leave the welfare program as we have known it for the last three-plus decades. The whole premise of us being here today until this job is done is that we want to change that welfare system as we have known it.

So, to say that we are going to change the whole chassis drivetrain and other aspects of this vehicle, but keep the engine of how we distribute the money to pay to make the vehicle mobile, exactly the same as we had in the past, is, I think, an intellectual disconnect. If we are going to change the program, we have to look at what is going to be required on a nationwide basis and on a State-by-State basis in order to accomplish the objectives of the new—not the old—welfare system.

The fact is that the change that is going to be most fundamental to the States is that they are now going to take on the requirement subject to both carrots and sticks in sanctions to move people from welfare to work. We have had some experience with this, Mr. President. Two of the longest term pilot programs in welfare reform are in the cities of Gainesville and Pensacola, FL. They have been working for several years to try to determine, not in theory, but in practice, with real people.

What does it take to get folks off welfare? What does it take to get them that first job and then get them in the position that they can hold the job in the future? The fact is it takes, for many of those people, a significant investment. We have to invest in job training for people who do not have any job skills. You have to invest in job placement for people who have never gone out to get a job before. You have to invest in child care so that there is somebody there to look after the kids while the mother is in training and in the first months of employment.

Those all have significant costs. Those costs are within ranges fairly consistent from State to State across the country. Yet, we are going to start some States with four, or five, or six times more money than others with poor children in order to be able to pay for those common transitional expenses.

I am afraid that we are about to build into the architecture of welfare reform failure for many States, and then after we have built in failure, we are going to impose heavy sanctions on those States that fail, which will make it even less likely that they will be able to achieve success.

I fear that the result of all of that is going to be that we will waste several years in accomplishing the objectives that we all see, which is to move people from dependence to independence and self-sufficiency and pride that comes with the ability to support oneself, that we are going to lose that opportunity over the next period as we start this process with a fundamentally, structurally failed architecture.

Mr. President, if I thought that we were starting this from a suspect place but that was just a necessary political accommodation in order to get off the blocks, and then we would soon be moving towards a greater level of equity, I could accept that as a pragmatic means of moving from the old to the new.

Are we going to be making that transition? Let us just look at two of the States that I cited: the State of Mississippi and the State of New York. How long under the Hutchison amendment will it take for the State of Mississippi to reach the State of New York in its funds available for poor children? Will the Senator from Pennsylvania think that maybe when we celebrate the 300th anniversary of the country in the year 2076, would we have done it by then? Sadly not. Will we have done it when we celebrate the 400th anniversary of the country in the year 2176? Mr. President, sadly not.

It will, in fact, not be until the year 2202, exactly 206 years from today, 2202, before Mississippi will finally close the gap and be the equivalent of New York. That means that it will be some six to seven generations before that gap is closed.

My colleague and friend from Pennsylvania is a patient man. He is prepared to wait until the year 2202 to achieve equity. I am more impatient. I do not believe that my life expectancy is going to extend to that year. I would like to see some more reasonable date at which we will begin to achieve parity among the States so we can then expect the States to be subject to a parity of sanctions and incentives in terms of whether they have, in fact, achieved the goal of moving people from welfare to work.

We have suggested a 5-year transitional plan to achieve that result. The Senator from Pennsylvania was very gracious in recognizing that this is a legitimate concern, and I recognize that it is not easy to do. You have people who have been operating under the old system with certain sets of expectations. But, frankly, we are asking lots of people to change their whole pattern. We are asking people who have been essentially waiting to receive a check once a month now to get up every day and go to work. That is a change. We are asking communities that have previously closed the door to employment opportunities for many of these people to open the door and create the chance for them to become self-sufficient.

I think that we ought to, as politicians, challenge ourselves, be willing to make some of the same kinds of adjustments in this new system. And certainly one of those adjustments ought to be fundamental fairness in the way we treat American children wherever those children happen to live in this great Nation.

That is the purpose of the Graham-Bumpers amendment. Mr. President, as I indicated earlier, by unanimous consent I have reserved the right to modify this amendment up to the time of the vote on Tuesday. We would be receptive to further ideas as to how to better achieve this objective.

I also indicated that my friend and cosponsor, Senator BUMPERS, will utilize some time on Monday to speak further on this matter. I hope that over the next few days my colleagues will study this issue of fundamental fairness—the fact that some 35 States would be benefited as we move, over time, toward fairness—and ask themselves, is it not time as we change welfare as we have known it to also change a pattern of expenditure of Federal funds which has seriously disadvantaged many of the poorest children in America?

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, if I could just make one quick comment, and that is I think the Senator's example of Mississippi and New York actually illustrates the point as to why the formula in the underlying bill is a fairer formula. To suggest the cost of living to provide for a poor child in Mississippi is the same as it is to provide for a child in Manhattan I think is obvious. It is not the same. The cost of living in a lot of areas in this country is substantially lower than it is elsewhere. California is one of the States that would be harmed by the Senator's amendment. There is a much higher cost of living in the States that are highlighted than in the other States.

So there is a disparity, and one of the reasons that States like Pennsylvania, California, and New York have to spend more money is because the Federal grants are set at a flat level, which may be very adequate for Mississippi but certainly not for New York City or San Francisco or Philadelphia and a lot of other places. So the States have had to make up that difference and, in fact, drawn more Federal dollars as a result. There is in a sense, it sounds, an inequity, that a child in Mississippi should be given the same as a child in New York when in a sense the child in Mississippi, to maintain the standard of living, needs less money than a child in New York, where the cost of living is higher.

So that is part of what makes these discussions on formulas so incredibly complex and difficult, and very difficult to resolve. But I think we have done the best we possibly can.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time. If the Senator from Florida is finished, if he will yield back his time, we will then move on to the next amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

I would like to, however, submit for the RECORD a list of the penalties and rewards contained in this bill as a means of underscoring the discrepancy in the likelihood of States being subject to sanction or receiving incentives based on the amount of funds that they will receive under this bill per child in poverty.

I ask unanimous consent that "Use of Rewards and Penalties for the Welfare Work Requirements" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 4937

(Purpose: To Change retention rates under the food stamp program)

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from South Dakota, Mr. PRESSLER, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SANTORUM], for Mr. PRESSLER, for himself and Mr. DASCHLE, proposes an amendment numbered 4937.

The amendment is as follows:

Beginning on page 70, strike line 21 and all that follows through page 71, line 3, and insert the following:

"(c) RETENTION RATE.—The provision of the first sentence of section 16(a) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2025(a)) is amended by striking "25 percent during the period beginning October 1, 1990" and all that follows through "section 13(b)(2) of this Act" and inserting "35 percent of the value of all funds or allotments recovered or collected pursuant to subsections (b)(1) and (c) of section 13 and 20 percent of the value of all funds or allotments recovered or collected pursuant to section 13(b)(2) of this Act".

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I want to take a few minutes to explain the pending amendment. Eliminating food stamp fraud and abuse is of paramount importance, both in my State of South Dakota and across the Nation. Clearly, if there are steps that can be taken to curb the fraudulent use of food stamps, then we, as lawmakers, have a responsibility to take them. This amendment is one such step, and I believe it is fundamentally sound policy.

This amendment provides States incentives to police the fraudulent use of food stamps. By granting States the authority to retain 35 percent of a food stamp overissuance in instances of intentional fraud and 20 percent in the event of nonintentional overissuance, they are encouraged to pursue perpetrators to the fullest extent of the law. A recent study by the South Dakota Department of Social Services demonstrated unequivocally that a two-tiered system, such as the one proposed by this amendment, is far more effective at encouraging States to pursue food stamp fraud than the flat retention rate system proposed in the underlying reconciliation bill.

Moreover, this amendment has been scored by the Congressional Budget Office as having no significant cost. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support the amendment.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, this amendment has been agreed to by both sides, and I ask unanimous consent it be agreed to and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4937) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4930

(Purpose: To strengthen food stamp work requirements)

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

I call up amendment No. 4930 which is at the desk, and I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], for himself, Mr. FAIRCLOTH, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. SHELBY, and Mr. SMITH, proposes an amendment numbered 4930.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike section 1134 and insert the following:

SEC. 1134. WORK REQUIREMENT.

Section 6 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2015), as amended by section 1133, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(o) WORK REQUIREMENT—

"(1) DEFINITION OF WORK PROGRAM.—In this subsection, the term 'work program' means—

"(A) a program under the Job Training Partnership Act (29 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.);

"(B) a program under section 236 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2296); or

"(C) a program of employment or training operated or supervised by a State or political subdivision of a State that meets standards approved by the Governor of the State, including a program under subsection (d)(4), other than a job search program or a job search training program.

"(2) WORK REQUIREMENT.—Subject to paragraph (3), no individual shall be eligible to participate in the food stamp program as a member of any household if the individual did not—

"(A) work 20 hours or more per week, averaged monthly;

"(B) participate in and comply with the requirements of a work program for at least 20 hours or more per week, as determined by the State agency; or

"(C) participate in and comply with the requirements of a program under section 20 or a comparable program established by a State or political subdivision of a State.

"(3) EXEMPTIONS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to an individual if the individual is—

"(A) a parent residing with a dependent child under 18 years of age;

"(B) mentally or physically unfit;

"(C) under 18 years of age;

"(D) 50 years of age or older; or

"(E) a pregnant woman.".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, as we so frequently say around this place, I will be brief. The pending amendment, offered by Senator FAIRCLOTH and me, and cosponsored by the distinguished Senator from Texas, [Mr. GRAMM], the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, [Mr. NICKLES], the distinguished Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SHELBY], and the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. SMITH], is very simple. It requires able-bodied food stamp recipients to go to work for at least 20 hours a week—if they expect to continue to receive food stamps free of charge—at the expense, I might emphasize, of those taxpayers who work 40 hours a week or more to pay the bill.

I must be candid—other food stamp proposals do not go nearly far enough, in my judgment, in making workfare a reality. I do not believe it is fair to working Americans, many of whom have to work two jobs or more in order to feed and clothe their families, to have to pay taxes to support those who are not motivated to get off their rear ends and join the work force of America.

Who knows, Mr. President, if they tried it, they might like it. If they are obliged to go to work a little bit for their free food stamps, they might just be surprised to discover that it is rewarding to work regularly and permanently like most other Americans have to do.

Excluded from the requirements of this amendment—let me emphasize this—excluded are young people under 18, although some young people under 18 are busy many nights shooting each other, parents of youngsters under 18, physically disabled people, pregnant women, and people over 50 years of age.

Credible evidence indicates there are at least 12 million able-bodied people in this country presently receiving food stamps, many without doing one lick of work to get them. My fellow sponsors of this amendment and I are simply proposing that these people must start working for at least 20 hours a week to qualify for free food stamps. That will leave the other 20 hours for them to get busy and find full-time jobs so that they can be supported by themselves instead of the Federal taxpayers.

I am convinced that there are many kinds of honest work for food stamp recipients to do. The pending amendment allows recipients to sign up for job training programs at the Federal level as well as for employment and training programs at the State level.

The pending amendment puts accountability into the Federal Food Stamp Program by putting an end to giving food stamp benefits to able-bodied people who just refuse to work. If they are not willing to work, then the working taxpayers should not be forced to finance deliberate idleness.

Mr. President, in a moment I shall move to table my own amendment because I have been informed that an effort is being contemplated to try to avoid an up-or-down vote on it. I want to go on record regarding the significance of what this amendment proposes, and I want all other Senators to go on record likewise.

So I will move to table this amendment (No. 4930) and ask for the yeas and nays. And, of course, I will vote against tabling, as will the other Senators who are cosponsoring this amendment, and I do hope that there will be enough Senators who will vote against tabling to make it a viable amendment.

I am quite confident that some attention will be given to how Senators will vote on this tabling motion. So let me reiterate, just to make it perfectly clear, that Senators favoring the requirement that able-bodied food stamp recipients must go to work for at least 20 hours a week in order to be eligible for free food stamps, those Senators should vote against tabling this amendment as I will vote against tabling. Senators not favoring this work requirement for those receiving free food stamps should, of course, vote aye, in favor of tabling the amendment sponsored by the Senator from North Carolina.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move to table amendment No. 4930. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I yield the floor and yield such time as I may have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, our colleague, Senator LEAHY of Vermont, was unable to be here this afternoon. He has asked me to make a statement on his behalf in reference to the amendment that has just been offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Speaking on Senator LEAHY's behalf:

> I oppose the Helms amendment. It would deny food stamps to millions of unemployed workers, including factory workers who have worked for 10 or 20 years and then are laid off when a plant closes. The Helms amendment would replace the tough work requirements already in the bill with a flat prohibition on the provision of food stamps to unemployed workers between the ages of 18 and 50 who are not disabled and do not have children under the age of 18. The Senate defeated a version of Senator HELMS' amendment last year by a vote of 66 to 32. Under the Helms amendment, no unemployed worker without a minor child in the household, no such worker could receive food stamps unless he or she was working at least 20 hours per week in a workfare slot. If the worker was furloughed or laid off, he or she generally would be immediately removed from the Food Stamp Program.
>
> The amendment does not provide funding to create workfare positions to which these individuals could be referred. The amendment simply denies food stamps to laid-off workers who are looking for a new job but have not yet found one.

Mr. President, I offer that statement in behalf of our colleague, Senator LEAHY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The record will so note.

AMENDMENT NO. 4936

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment which I offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to it being in order? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4938

(Purpose: To preserve eligibility of immigrants for programs of student assistance under the Public Health Service Act)

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent I may offer an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Illinois, Senator SIMON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk for Mr. SIMON and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM], for Mr. SIMON, proposes an amendment numbered 4938.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

> In Section 2403(c)(2)(H), after "1965" and before the period at the end, add ", and Titles III, VII, and VIII of the Public Health Service Act".

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent all time on this amendment be yielded back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask the amendment be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thank the Chair.

Mr. CRAIG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, my colleague, Senator SHELBY, from Alabama, will be coming over shortly to lay down an amendment in relation to adoption tax credit. In cosponsoring this amendment with him to the welfare reform bill that would provide a refundable tax credit for the adoption expenses, I am excited about this legislation and feel that this is an important time to move it.

It has not even been a year since our last joint effort to pass the amendment to H.R. 4. That amendment was overwhelmingly supported, and I hope my colleagues will respond to our efforts today in an equally positive manner. This amendment provides tax credit support to families as they struggle with the bureaucratic process involving adoption. Many people who are aware that I have become an adoptive parent recognize the roadblocks that all of us face when we choose this course in the process of building a family.

I have had that experience. I do not want others to have the kind of difficulty that many families do in this process. That is why I have worked with others to assure that we make all-out efforts to build an adoption tax credit so that adoptive families, or those who use adoption to build families, can find it as rewarding and no more difficult than those who are successful in building a family in a natural way.

This amendment changes the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 by providing a refundable tax credit for adoption expenses. It also excludes employees and military adoption assistance benefits and withdrawals from IRA's used for adoption expenses from gross income.

What does an adoption tax credit have to do with welfare reform? Frankly, not much, Mr. President, if we are discussing our current welfare system, but a great deal, I think, if we are discussing a dramatically reformed system. Then we want innovation and creativity. The current welfare system has created a dependence on Federal programs while the envisioned system encourages independence. Welfare spending has been growing at an alarming pace, but so has the number of children living in poverty, and so has the number of children who need families.

Providing a future for these children by uniting them with loving families who can provide not only their financial welfare but also their emotional welfare has to be a goal of this Congress. As we move toward a system that promotes greater strength in the American family, we ought to encourage efforts like this by using the adoption tax credit.

Too often we read stories about the tragic experiences couples have endured in order to adopt a child. It is my hope that our work here will lead to more happy stories and fewer heartbreaking reports.

Adoption is a too often overlooked option to get the best of all worlds: uniting a child with a loving, nurturing family. I think we need to keep focused on that single fact by continuing our efforts to improve this process.

I am pleased to be here again, with my colleague from Alabama, Senator SHELBY to offer this important amendment today. We need to give adoptive families a fairer shake. I urge my colleagues to support improving access to adoption, by voting for the SHELBY amendment.

I certainly hope this Senate will respond as willingly as they did on H.R. 4 in the inclusion of this amendment in our welfare reform package.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHCROFT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, it was my intent to send an amendment to the desk which would strengthen and accelerate the work requirement that is contained in this bill. My amendment, in the form of the Levin–Dole amendment, was added to the Senate-passed welfare reform bill last September. I offered it, Senator Dole at that time cosponsored it, and it was adopted.

The reason that I offered the amendment then and support this approach now is that I believe work requirements should be clear and should be strong and should be applied promptly.

The amendment would add a requirement that welfare recipients either be in job training, be in school, or be working in private-sector jobs within 3 months of the receipt of benefits. That was the heart of the Levin–Dole amendment.

If private sector jobs cannot be found, then those recipients would be required to perform community service employment. Community service employment is the backup in the Levin–Dole amendment, in the approach which is essential, and it would be required that somebody engage in that community service within months.

This requirement would be phased in to allow States the chance to adjust administratively, and States would be permitted the option to opt out of the requirement by notification to the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

The bill before us requires welfare recipients to work within 2 years of the receipt of benefits—2 years. The question is, why wait 2 years? Why should an able-bodied person receiving welfare benefits not be required to work for 2 years? That was a flaw in the bill last time, which was corrected with the Levin–Dole amendment; it is a flaw in this bill, which would have been corrected in the Daschle substitute; and is now, hopefully, going to be corrected in a manner that I am going to describe.

But the heart of my approach, which we have fought for now for 2 years, is that able-bodied welfare recipients who are not in private sector jobs, who are not in job training, who are not in school, work within months and not be allowed to go without working for 2 years. There is no reason to wait 2 years when we are talking about able-bodied people receiving welfare benefits. There is no reason why those folks should not be working within months.

Last night, I shared with the Democratic and Republican staffs my amendment, which would do the same thing as the Levin–Dole amendment did last year. We were informed this morning that the Democratic staff had been able to clear this amendment on this side. We were awaiting clearance on the Republican side.

Earlier today, Senator D'AMATO offered an amendment on this subject. We have now had a chance to review the D'Amato amendment. The D'Amato amendment, with one or two very technical changes, is the Levin–Dole amendment. So we are happy to cosponsor the D'Amato amendment. It is indeed the same amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be listed as a cosponsor of the D'Amato amendment immediately following Senator D'AMATO's name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, when the D'Amato amendment was offered, since the Democratic staff had not had an opportunity to review the amendment to see if it was the same amendment, to see whether or not it could be cleared on this side, it was not cleared on this side at that time. As I said, we have subsequently had the opportunity to read this amendment. It is the same amendment. I am happy to cosponsor it.

I see no particular reason, unless somebody wishes there to be a rollcall, why this ought to be necessarily held up for a rollcall. It makes no particular difference to me because I think it will pass overwhelmingly if it is put to a rollcall.

But I do want to inform the Chair and our colleagues that, as far as I know, this amendment has been cleared on our side because, in fact, my amendment had been cleared on this side. So I will yield the floor and simply state that, should the floor managers wish to have a voice vote on this amendment at this time, as far as I know on this side that would be fine.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the so-called Levin–Dole amendment and the two amendments that I have referred to in my remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Levin-Dole Amendment No. 2486, as Modified

On page 12, between lines 22 and 28, insert the following:

Amendment No. 4927

Section 402(a)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 2103(a)(1), is amended by adding the end the following:

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SHELBY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

Mr. LEVIN. I wonder if the Senator would yield?

Mr. SHELBY. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. I wonder if I could make inquiry of the manager of the bill on the other side whether or not it is their wish to continue to list this, now the D'Amato-Levin amendment, for a rollcall on Tuesday or whether they would like to have this voice voted now since it has been cleared on this side.

Mr. ROTH. I say to my distinguished friend from Michigan that, as he knows, the yeas and nays have been ordered. There are people on this side who want a recorded vote.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank my friend. And I thank my friend from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to offer an amendment on behalf of myself, Senators CRAIG, GRAMS, COATS, and HELMS. The amendment will help provide, Mr. President, homes for thousands of children who are waiting to be adopted in this country. This amendment is the same amendment which was agreed to by a vote of 93 to 5 right here in the Senate during its consideration of welfare reform this past fall.

Mr. President, this strong bipartisan vote shows that the Senate is committed—committed—to making adoption more affordable for working families in America.

Mr. President, regardless of what kind of welfare reform we pass in this Chamber, the grim reality is that the out-of-wedlock birthrate in this country is projected to reach 50 percent very soon after the turn of the century, which is only a few years away.

Mr. President, we are not far from having one out of every two children born in this country born into a home where there is no father. That is a profound change in our culture which will have enormous consequences for American society as we have known it. One of these consequences, no doubt, will be an increase in the number of children neglected and, yes, abandoned. It is therefore more important than ever—more important than ever—for us to help find ways to provide for these children.

Mr. President, study after study shows and common sense tells us that a child is much better off being adopted by a stable, two-parent family than being shipped around from foster homes to State agencies, and back again. There are currently hundreds of thousands of children in America waiting to be adopted. But the current financial burden prevents many parents from doing so.

Many people do not realize how expensive it is to adopt a child. There are many fees and costs involved with adopting a child, including maternity home care, normal prenatal and hospital care for the mother and the child, preadoption foster care for an infant, "home study" fees and, yes, legal fees. These costs range anywhere from about $13,000 to $36,000 according to the National Council for Adoption.

Mr. President, I know of many families in my State, and perhaps your

State, that would love to adopt a child into their family but simply do not have $13,000, much less $36,000 to do so. As a result of this enormous cost, children are denied homes, and parents are denied children.

Mr. President, the amendment I am offering today will help make adoption financially possible for many children and families. It provides a $5,000 fully refundable tax credit for adoption expenses. It also provides that when an employer pays for adoption expenses incurred by an employee, the employee does not have to count that assistance as income for taxable purposes.

Finally, Mr. President, this amendment provides that withdrawals from an IRA can be made penalty free and excluded from income if used for qualified adoption expenses. These measures are a first step in tearing down the massive financial barriers to adoption in this country.

Mr. President, I believe the question before us today is not if the number of abandoned children is going to increase over the next few years; no one disputes that. We know the answer to that. The real question for us to answer is, what are we going to do about it? This amendment would be a big first start in America. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I agree with my good friend, Senator SHELBY, that we need tax incentives to promote adoptions. Adoption is good for the child, is good for the family, and it is good for society. It was for this reason that the Finance Committee unanimously passed out of committee an adoption tax credit bill.

The Shelby amendment, unlike the Finance Committee adoption tax credit bill, provides a refundable tax credit. The Finance Committee decided against a refundable credit in its legislation because of the very, very serious history of problems we have had with fraud in refundable credits.

I also point out that unlike the Shelby amendment, the Finance Committee bill, which, as I said, passed out of the committee unanimously, provides not only a $5,000 credit for non-special-needs adoptions, but also a $6,000 credit for special-needs adoptions. I think this is a very important provision of this legislation that addresses a very, very special need.

Going back to the Shelby amendment, I must point out also that it is not paid for. If the Shelby amendment were to pass, we would be required to find additional savings in the welfare bill of $1.515 billion over the next 6 years. The Finance Committee bill, on the other hand, is fully offset.

Let me also say that I have been assured by the majority leader that he will schedule the adoption tax credit legislation which passed out of the Finance Committee for floor consideration before the end of the year.

Although I strongly support giving tax incentives for the promotion of adoptions, Senator SHELBY's amendment is not germane to the welfare legislation. Therefore, it is my intent when the time on this amendment has expired to make a point of order.

Mr. SHELBY. The Senator from Delaware talked about refundables. Why do we have in our bill a refundable tax credit? Basically, because many low-income people in America want to adopt a child and would not have the $5,000 tax liability, and thus would not benefit as much from the Finance Committee proposal. The adoption community supports our version. I hope the Senate will continue to support it.

I yield back the remaining time, if the Senator from Delaware will yield back his time.

Mr. ROTH. I make the additional comment that under our legislation, the tax credit can be carried over for 5 years. I believe, therefore, we have addressed the problem about which Senator SHELBY is concerned.

I yield back the balance of my time. It is my understanding the Senator has yielded back his time.

Mr. SHELBY. I yield back my time.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the Shelby amendment under sections 305 and 310 of the Budget Act on the grounds that the amendment is not germane.

Since the amendment, if adopted, would reduce revenue by $1.515 billion over the next 6 years, I also make a point of order against the amendment under section 310(d)(2) of the Budget Act.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I move to waive any provisions of the Budget Act which might impinge upon my amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the Frist amendment is a sense of the Senate amendment which would state the view of Congress that the President should ensure that the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services approve some 22 welfare waiver requests submitted from 16 States.

I cannot support such a sweeping blanket amendment.

My own State of Michigan has a waiver application pending which was submitted late in June which contains some 75 individual waivers. This request has much merit. The proposal contains work requirements which seem to be similar to legislation which I succeeded in adding to the Senate-passed welfare reform bill last year and which I will offer to this bill. However, we have not been given any opportunity to evaluate the various waiver requests of the other 15 States embodied in this amendment. We just do not know the details of welfare waiver submissions from Utah or Georgia or Kansas or Wyoming or other States included in the amendment.

The President and the Department of Health and Human Services have approved more than 60 waivers, more than any previous President. I support this kind of flexibility. I hope that before this session of Congress ends, we will have, in law, comprehensive bipartisan welfare reform which makes such waivers unnecessary.

I want to comment on several other amendments to the pending legislation.

I cannot support two Ashcroft amendments which would mandate that States take specific actions with respect to drug testing and with respect to recipients who have not immunized their children. The underlying bill permits States to test welfare recipients for use of illegal drugs and to sanction recipients who test positive. The bill also does not preclude States from sanctioning recipients who are negligent in failing to properly immunize their children. Requiring States to take these actions is not consistent with the intent of this legislation which is to provide greater flexibility to the States to better design their specific welfare measures in ways that better suit needs and circumstances in their States and localities.

I support the Graham amendment to strike certain provisions relative to legal, I repeat, legal, immigrants. The underlying bill goes too far because it would deny food stamps to severely disabled legal immigrants who have worked, and then become disabled, and because it would take food stamps away from legal immigrants, who waited their turn and came here under the rules, retroactively. I will support a Feinstein amendment which would make the prohibition against legal immigrants receiving food stamp assistance prospective. That is more fair. That will serve as a warning to future immigrants that they cannot expect to receive these benefits, but it does not yank the rug out from under legal immigrants who have played by the rules.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, the country's primary welfare program—aid to families with dependent children [AFDC]—is a failure, both for those participating in it and for those paying for it. What started as a well-intentioned program in the 1930's to help widows today has become an enormous program that takes basic American values—work, reward for work, family, and personal responsibility—and turns them on their head.

The incentives in the current welfare system contradict our shared values and motivates harmful behavior by welfare recipients. Today's welfare program financially rewards parents who don't work, don't marry, and have children out-of-wedlock.

The program is failing to move welfare recipients off dependency and into the work force. It is a factor in the breakdown of two-parent families and the buildup of teen pregnancy. AFDC started as a program to assist families in poverty but now is seen as a program that perpetuates poverty.

Mr. President, there is bipartisan agreement that our welfare system must be changed so welfare incentives reward our society's shared values of work, marriage, and personal responsibility. Both parties have included work requirements as integral parts of their welfare proposals. I believe that Democrats and Republicans alike wish to use our Nation's welfare programs to combat social ills—particularly the growth in out-of-wedlock pregnancies among teenagers. I am convinced that members of both parties are concerned with the impact of any type of welfare reform on children—who comprise 9 of the 14 million recipients of Federal AFDC dollars.

The first priority for welfare reform is to put welfare recipients to work. The public demands that we stop giving cash to adults on welfare, and start giving them jobs, and they're right. Virtually all welfare experts, both liberal and conservative, agree that work and its rewards are the solution to the welfare crisis.

We have considerable experience with work programs. The Job Opportunities Basic Skills Program, which has come to be known as JOBS, was passed in 1988 under the leadership of Senator MOYNIHAN. Evaluations of the JOBS Program that have been conducted have shown that the programs have had some success; they have begun to make a difference.

Our experience with that program has taught us several important lessons. First, programs that emphasize placing welfare recipients in jobs as quickly as possible are the most successful and cost-effective. Inevitably, setting placement as a priority creates a degree of conflict with other program goals such as assisting in training and education. Yet, long delays in job placement can occur while welfare recipients are routed through a succession of training programs.

Second, assessing recipients' individual needs and addressing those needs is critical to placing them successfully. Do they have appropriate child care? Do they need supplementary education or training? Do they have the skills and ability necessary for the proposed job? Little purpose is served in placing a welfare recipient in a job if their child care needs can not be addressed, transportation to and from the job is unworkable, or special skills are needed.

Third, successful programs form strong links with local employers and work hard to maintain those links with the local employers, who are the source of the jobs. The work requirements in the bill before us will apply to over 1.5 million adults. By comparison, approximately 4 million individuals currently work at or below the minimum wage. Finding jobs for an additional 1.5 million adults, without simply displacing current workers, is going to be a massive challenge.

I am pleased that the current legislation includes funds for a performance bonus to States that move people into real jobs and off of welfare. In the current welfare system, income maintenance is the focus—processing applications and mailing checks to people. The welfare proposals that I voted against last fall, equated reform with savings rather than returning recipients to work. We must change that focus, and put a premium on getting people into the work force, where their lives can be sounder on a sounder foundation. States that embrace the "work first" philosophy and turn their welfare systems into effective employment offices ought to be rewarded. Otherwise, a welfare maintenance system will be perpetuated.

The performance bonus requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) to develop and publish a formula that allocates the bonus fund to States based on the number of welfare recipients who become ineligible for cash assistance because of employment in an unsubsidized job. The incentive payments provided by this amendment will be distributed based on the State's success in getting long-term recipients off welfare and into lasting jobs and on the unemployment conditions of a State.

I am also pleased to introduce amendments to reduce teen pregnancy and help young mothers and their children avoid the cycle of long-term welfare dependency. As part of last year's welfare debate, I joined with Senator CONRAD to introduce an amendment that proposed numerous provisions to prevent teen pregnancy. Most of the provisions in that amendment are included in the bill before us, and I appreciate that very much. The legislation requires teen mothers to live at home or in safe, adult-supervised living arrangements—so-called second chance homes. It establishes national goals regarding education strategies and reduction of pregnancy rates. It includes a sense of the Senate provision attacking pregnancies that result from statutory rape.

However, there is more that can be done. The birth rate for single teenage parents has tripled since 1960, signaling that the battle against teenage pregnancy is ever more critical. The power to change any community must involve an internal structure at the grassroots level. The battle against teenage pregnancy must begin at the local level, because changing the attitudes and behavior of teens requires an intimate, hands-on involvement.

My amendment requires States to dedicate 3 percent of their share of the title XX social service block grant—an amount equal to $71.4 million—to programs and services that stress to minors the difficulty of being a teenage parent. By teaching minors to delay parenthood, these programs will infuse our children with a clear understanding of the consequences of teenage childbearing.

I will also offer an amendment to reduce the incidence of statutory rape in the Nation which many studies link to teenage pregnancies in the Nation.

Shockingly, the majority of the men who father the families of teenage mothers are adults. The National Center for Health and Statistics reported in 1991 that almost 70 percent of births to teenage girls were fathered by men age 20 or older. Moreover, the younger the mother, the greater the age gap between her and the father. There are men who are impregnating girls age 14 and younger, and they are on average 10 to 15 years older, according to a 1990 study by the California Vital Statistics Section. Similar studies bear out this result.

These adult men are impregnating an increasing number of girls age 11–14. Despite a slight drop in the overall teen birth rate in the last few years, the birth rate for girls age 14 and under increased 26 percent in the late 1980's. These girls are not just young mothers—they are children. And sexual predators are taking advantage of their inability to form and articulate a decision about their bodies. In order to choose abstinence for young girls and to make this choice clear to adult men, the Federal Government must focus some resources on predatory adult men in order to both stop and hopefully dissuade them from their illegal behavior.

Kathleen Sylvester of the Progressive Policy Institute says that the most recent research indicates that in those States where awareness of this problem has been raised, prosecutors have organized themselves to be aggressive and obtained adequate sentences for convicted offenders. California, Connecticut, and New York have all established special units in their district attorneys' offices to target sexual predators and counsel their victims. Florida is getting tough as well. Pending legislation would charge a man over the age of 18 who has intercourse with a girl under the age of 15 with second-degree statutory rape, a felony. To spur the other States to follow their example and stop these criminals, the Federal Government must send them unequivocal proof that we are serious in this intent.

To this end, I applaud the inclusion in the present bill that it is the sense of the Senate that States should aggressively enforce statutory rape laws. I propose an amendment which would add three additional steps for us to take. First, it appropriates $6 million to the Attorney General of the United States to fight statutory rape, particularly by predatory older men who commit repeat offenses. The appropriation will enable the Justice Department to pay strict attention to the crime of statutory rape, as part of its violence against women initiative. The money should be used to research both the linkage between statutory rape and teen pregnancy, as well as those predatory older men who are repeat offenders. It should also provide for the education of State and local law enforcement officials on the prevention and prosecution of statutory rape.

Second, my amendment requires the States to work to reduce the incidence of statutory rape. Activities would include the expansion of criminal law enforcement, public education, and counseling services, as well as the restructuring of teen pregnancy prevention programs to include men. Third, it requires States to certify to the Federal Government that they are engaged in such activities to stop statutory rape.

A 1992 sampling of 500 teen mothers revealed that two-thirds had histories of sexual abuse with adult men averaging age 27. Another study conducted in Washington State studied 535 teen mothers and discovered that 62 percent of them experienced rape or molestation before their first pregnancy, and the mean age of the offenders was 27. Clearly, the reality of mothers sacrificing educational opportunities to give birth to fatherless babies and live in poverty is not a choice but a symptom and a result of a greater problem. Large numbers of older men are crossing legal and social boundaries to engage in sexual activity with girls below the age of consent, and thereby emotionally rob them of their power to say "no" in later years.

This bill makes strides in demanding the responsibility of fathers. It stipulates and enforces their duty to own up to their paternity, to pay child support, and to set a good example for their children by working in private sector or community service jobs. It should further impress upon a certain group of men their duty to refrain from sexually preying on young girls and dispossessing them of their fundamental right to make sexual, educational, and career choices.

Although the American public supports tough welfare measures, they are reluctant to cut people off and leave defenseless children without some means of basic support. Welfare reform, therefore, must balance cutbacks with programs that create training and employment opportunities. The reform movement must include a component that provides those on public assistance with the necessary skills and training required to genuinely compete in the work force. Welfare reform demands accountability not just from the poor, but from government as well.

The Senate bill is better than the House bill in many ways. Welfare must change to focus on work and on personal responsibility—but it need not be unfair to children. The Senate bill contains more funding for child care, it maintains existing child protection programs such as adoption assistance, foster care, and child abuse and neglect. It does not require, but gives States the option to employ a family cap and to deny payments to minor, single mothers, and it does not allow States to penalize mothers who can't work because they can't find or afford child care.

There are still serious problems with the Senate bill most of which have to do with the prospects for children who parents are not acting responsibly.

Under the proposed bill, States can opt out of the Federal Food Stamp Program and receive a State block grant. This provision will put many poor children and elderly at risk. Under a flat block grant, States will be unable to meet the needs of poor families during periods of recession or high unemployment. The Food Research and Action Center estimates that S. 1795 will reduce food and nutrition assistance to 14 million children and 2 million elderly persons due to the overall cuts in the Federal Food Stamp Program.

The bill repeals the Mickey Leland Child Hunger Relief Act which removed the cap on the food stamp shelter deduction for low income families. Food stamp shelter deduction provides families who are not receiving housing aid additional food stamp benefits. The Senate Finance-passed bill will reduce cash assistance for families who qualify for this deduction—forcing them to choose between providing food for their children or paying the rent.

The new legislation will also have a very unfair and potentially very harmful impact on nearly a million legal immigrants. The bill bans legal immigrants, many of whom have been here over 10 years, from the Supplemental Security Income [SSI] assistance program, Medicaid and food stamps. Recipients of SSI, most of who are poor elderly or disabled immigrants will remain impoverished. The rapid phase-in-period will leave many who are currently receiving assistance without any basic means of support.

The bill also does little to maintain a contingency fund and serious maintenance of effort requirements for the States. And it fails to provide sufficient bonuses to States that are successful in moving welfare recipients into unsubsidized jobs.

This bill is far from perfect, but it can bring some measure of consistency back to our values and the incentives in our welfare system. It can lead a national effort to cut down on the number of people on the welfare rolls and add to the number in to jobs. It can attack the intertwined problems of teenage pregnancy and welfare dependency.

There is a tragic link between welfare and a host of other problems facing our society today, including crime, illegitimacy, drug abuse, poverty, and illiteracy. This legislation attempts to severe that link. In effect, we're trying to destroy the welfare cycle and return welfare to its original purpose—a temporary form of assistance for the very poor as they seek to work their way out of hard times.

If the promise of the legislation is realized, millions of American families will move off welfare into real jobs, and we will see a resulting decrease in poverty, crime, illegitimacy, and an increase in economic development and family stability.

I hope that my amendments will be adopted so that we can obtain improvements in the conference committee with the House of Representatives.

ASSETS FOR INDEPENDENCE AMENDMENT

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, many of the congressional efforts at reforming the welfare system have focused on the elimination of the Federal bureaucracy, the devolution of Federal authority, and the transfer of funds to the State bureaucracy. In some respects, these reforms may be effective and efficient. In other areas, the devolution will prove too limited in that authority and funds remain remote from the people and communities who would most benefit from change and who are most capable of effecting that change.

Devolution to the States almost certainly will not change one critical flaw in traditional welfare programs—a focus on income maintenance and spending instead of a focus on asset-building and saving. The current welfare system in fact punishes the accumulation of assets by terminating eligibility for assistance when minimal asset levels are achieved.

There is then a need to help low-income individuals and families, whether working or on welfare, to develop and reaffirm strong habits for saving money and to invest that money in assets rather than spending it on consumer goods or other items that may not help lift the individual or family from poverty. There is particularly a need to focus on the building of assets whose high return on investment propels them into economic independence and personal and familial stability.

In addition, there is a recognized need to help revitalize low-income communities by reducing welfare rolls and increasing tax receipts, employment, and business activity with local enterprises and builders.

Mr. President, the assets for independence amendment approved by the Senate yesterday would allow States to use part of their block grant moneys to establish an individual development account [IDA] savings accounts to help welfare recipients and low-income families build the family's assets and strengthen its ability to remain independent from Government income-maintenance programs.

In some respects, IDA's are like IRA's for the working poor. Investments using assets from IDA savings accounts are strictly limited to three purposes: purchase of home, post-secondary education, or business capitalization. These purposes are connected with extremely high returns on investment and can propel both the communities and the families benefiting from the home, education, or small business into a new economic and personal prosperity.

Just how might an IDA work? The individual or family deposits whatever they can save—typically $5 to $20 a month—in the account. The sponsoring organization matches that deposit with funds provided by local churches and service organizations, corporations, foundations, and State or local governments. With Federal block granted welfare funds, a State match of these deposits can also be deposited in the account.

Just what are some of those benefits? Most fundamentally, participants will develop and reaffirm strong habits for saving money. To assist this, sponsor organizations will provide participating individuals and families intensive financial counseling and counseling to develop investment plans for education, home ownership, and entrepreneurship.

In addition, participating welfare and low-income families build assets whose high return on investment propels them into independence and stability. The community will also benefit from the significant return on an investment in IDA's: We can expect welfare rolls to be reduced; tax receipts to increase; employment to increase; and local enterprises and builders can expect increased business activity. Neighborhoods will be rejuvenated as new microenterprises and increased home renovation and building drive increased employment and community development.

In fact, it is estimated that an investment of $100 million in asset building through these individual accounts would generate 7,050 new businesses, 68,799 new job years, $730 million in additional earnings, 12,000 new or rehabilitated homes, $287 million in savings and matching contributions and earnings on those accounts, $188 million in increased assets for low-income families, 6,600 families removed from welfare rolls, 12,000 youth graduates from vocational education and college programs, 20,000 adults obtaining high school, vocational, and college degrees.

Source: Corporation for Enterprise Development, "The Return of the Dream: An Analysis of the Probable Economic Return on a National Investment in Individual Development Accounts," May 1995.

IDA's are planned or now available on a small scale across the country, including Indiana, Illinois, Virginia, Oregon, and Iowa. The assets for independence amendment has been developed after a review of numerous, similar, successful programs, and most notably one run by the Eastside Community Investments community development corporation in Indianapolis, IN. The amendment incorporates a number of protections developed with their assistance and based on their experience. For example, accounts will be held in a trust. In addition, sponsor organizations must cosign any withdrawal of funds; withdrawals are strictly limited to home purchase, education, and microenterprise.

I challenge this Congress to consider the $5.4 trillion we have spent on welfare programs in the past 30 years. Have these programs that focus on income maintenance been successful? Do we honestly believe that we can give money to low-income citizens and have them spend their way out of poverty? Or is it time to consider a new approach, not just an approach that focuses on a Federal bureaucracy or even a substituted State bureaucracy, but an approach that empowers families and communities directly to build assets with high returns on investment—returns whose economic and personal growth approaches the exponential?

The assets for independence amendment does just this. It does not concentrate on Government programs but focuses on community efforts to put high-return assets in the hands of families. I am very pleased that we have included it in this vital legislation.

COATS-WYDEN KINSHIP CARE AMENDMENT

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Coats-Wyden kinship care amendment, which was agreed to by the Senate last night. I would like to thank my colleague, Senator COATS, for his assistance with this important amendment.

Grandparents caring for grandchildren represent an underappreciated natural resource in our Nation. They hold tremendous potential for curing one of our society's most pressing maladies: The care of children who have no parents, or whose parents simply aren't up to the task of providing children a stable, secure, and nurturing living environment.

There is such a great reservoir of love and experience available to us, and more especially to the tens of thousands of American children who desperately need basic care giving. We provide public assistance to strangers for this kind of care, but the folks available to provide foster care homes are in short supply.

It is time that States and the Federal Government begin to promote policies that open doors to relatives who are ready, willing and able to care for these children. Some States have already been moving in this direction for over a decade. Over the past 10 years the number of children involved in extended family arrangements has increased by 40 percent. Currently, more than 3 million children are being raised by their grandparents. In other words, 5 percent of all families in this country are headed by grandparents.

However, in many places States still lack a system that includes relatives in the decisionmaking process when children are removed from the home. I have heard case after case of relatives who never heard from the child protection agency when a grandchild or other related child was removed from the home. Once the child was taken, extended family members had no contact and no way of finding out what then happened to the children. Sometimes brothers and sisters have been separated and a grandparent has spent years in court trying to reunite their family.

I have repeatedly heard the frustration of grandparents whose grandchildren, as far as they knew, disappeared in the night, and once the children entered the State child protection system they literally disappeared from their families' lives.

The amendment that we proposed, similar to one that was adopted by the House last spring, and to language that has been in almost every welfare bill since then, would give relatives preference over stranger caregivers when the State determines where to place a child who has been removed from the home. It's time we start developing policies that make it easier, instead of more difficult, for families to come together to raise their children.

As we rethink our child protection system, we need to rededicate ourselves to looking to families, including extended families, for solutions. When a child is separated from their parents, it is usually a painful and traumatic experience. Living with people that a child knows and trusts gives children a better chance in the world and gives families a better chance to rebuild themselves.

Again, I thank my colleague from across the aisle, Senator COATS, for his help with this amendment.

THE FEDERAL OIL AND GAS ROYALTY SIMPLIFICATION AND FAIRNESS ACT OF 1996

Mr. BINGAMAN. After extensive negotiations over the past year with the Department of the Interior, the affected States, and the industry, the Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Fairness Act is now before the Senate for final passage. This bipartisan reform of the Federal Royalty Program is identical to the version passed by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee in May.

The Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Fairness Act will result in a simpler, fairer and more cost effective way to administer oil and gas royalty collections on Federal lands. This is important legislation for the independent producers in New Mexico and for independent producers throughout the Nation.

The bill, H.R. 1975, amends the Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Management Act of 1982 with respect to royalty collections on Federal lands and the Outer Continental Shelf. It does not apply to Indian lands.

The bill establishes a statute of limitations to ensure royalty audits and collections are final within 7 years from the date of production; establishes reciprocity with respect to payment of interest on royalty overpayments and underpayments; simplifies recordkeeping and reporting requirements; and expands the Federal royalty functions that may be delegated to a qualifying State.

In short, The Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Simplification and Fairness Act will streamline the process, reduce the burden on industry while protecting the revenues of New Mexico and the Federal Government. I worked hard to make this a bill the President would sign. I urge that we pass this bill as soon as possible and send it to the President for his signature.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SMALL AIRPORT SAFETY COSTS

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am very concerned as to how the current airport safety situation may affect smaller airports. We certainly want our citizens who must fly in smaller airplanes with smaller companies to be safe. On the other hand, we do not want such an expensive layer of regulations that these smaller planes and smaller companies cannot operate because of prohibitive costs.

As we go forward with improving safety, I think of the smaller airports in South Dakota where people must fly in smaller aircraft and with smaller companies. We must keep those safe. We must meet the same standards applying to larger aircraft and larger companies. But let us remember that one size does not fit all. In achieving these safety goals, let us be certain we keep in mind the smaller airports of our country. This is a concern not only in South Dakota but also in Fresno, CA, for example, where I have relatives. People must fly in smaller aircraft if they are going to travel from Los Angeles to Fresno. Upstate New York has the same situation. If you are going to fly to Martha's Vineyard, you probably fly on a smaller aircraft.

So the point is that as we move forward quickly in possibly implementing new regulations, let us be certain we keep in mind the fact that at least half of Americans must originate their flights in what we call smaller airports. I certainly want them to be considered in this process.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Thursday, July 18, the Federal debt stood at $5,168,794,319,428.25.

On a per capita basis, every man, woman, and child in America owes $19,481.00 as his or her share of that debt.

THE DEATH OF U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE T.F. GILROY DALY

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I would like to pay tribute to a great public servant and one of the most honorable figures ever to serve on the Federal bench in the State of Connecticut, U.S. district judge T.F. Gilroy Daly, who died of cancer on Thursday, July 14.

A true giant of jurisprudence, Judge Daly was a former Army Ranger who stood 6 foot, 6 inches and presided over his courtroom with a regal presence. People commonly described Judge Daly as the epitome of what a judge should be. He was known for his impeccable character, his sense of fairness, and his unwavering commitment to the ideals of justice.

Judge Daly brought a wealth of life experience to the court, which shaped his career on the bench. After serving our country in the Korean war, Judge Daly worked as an assistant U.S. attorney, prosecuting organized crime cases in the Southern District of New York. After leaving the Justice Department, Judge Daly held a number of full and part time statewide posts in Connecticut, including deputy attorney general, deputy treasurer, and insurance commissioner.

Judge Daly gained prominence as a trial lawyer and demonstrated his sense of justice in the early 1970s when he took an unpaid leave from his State position to defend a young man who had been wrongly convicted of murder. After a 6-week hearing, he won a new trial for his client, and charges against the young man were eventually dropped after a grand jury investigation cleared him.

In 1977, President Jimmy Carter appointed Judge Daly to the Federal bench. he served as chief judge from 1983 to 1988, and he is credited with modernizing the Connecticut court system and significantly reducing the backlog of cases before the court. During his time on the bench, he presided over a number of high-profile trials and earned a reputation among defense attorneys and prosecuters as a stern, but fair-minded jurist. He ruled on numerous complex and potentially volatile issues involving discrimination in municipal hiring, State police interrogation methods, and public corruption.

He was particularly known for handing down harsh sentences to corrupt public officials who came before him. Being a man of such high moral standards, Judge Daly held a particular disdain for anyone who betrayed the trust of the general public. Judge Daly believed that without the people's trust, government cannot function effectively, and his career was dedicated to maintaining the integrity of the Constitution and protecting the rights of the general public.

Judge T.F. Gilroy Daly never lost sight of the fact that law is a public service profession, and his legacy will live on for years to come. He will be remembered as one of the most accomplished figures ever to preside in a Federal court, and he will be sorely missed by the people of Connecticut.

My thoughts and prayers go out to his wife Stuart, and his four children Timothy, Loan, Matthew and Anna.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. McCONNELL (for himself, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. KEMPTHORNE, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. COCHRAN):

S. 1975. A bill to amend the Competitive, Special, and Facilities Research Grant Act to provide increased emphasis on competitive grants to promote agricultural research projects regarding precision agriculture and to provide for the dissemination of the results of the research projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

THE PRECISION AGRICULTURE RESEARCH, EDUCATION, AND INFORMATION DISSEMINATION ACT OF 1996

• Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, today several colleagues and I are introducing the Precision Agriculture Research, Education, and Information Dissemination Act of 1996.

This legislation emphasizes research on precision agriculture technologies. These technologies are very existing and will enable the United States to maintain and augment our competitive edge in global agricultural markets. The legislation amends the Competitive, Special and Facilities Research Grant Act of 1965 by modifying the National Research Initiative [NRI] to give the Secretary of Agriculture authority to provide research, extension, and education competitive grants and programs that emphasize precision agriculture technologies and management practices.

This legislation represents a compromise between various interests. The bill is supported by the Fertilizer Institute, National Center for Resources Innovations, Experiment Station and Extension Service Directors, Lockheed Martin, and a consortium of other high tech companies.

An identical bill H.R. 3795 was introduced by Congressman LEWIS and Congressman CRAPO on July 11, 1996.

Precision agriculture technologies are rapidly advancing, and it is crucial that the agricultural community invest in this field of research so that all farmers will be able to benefit. This bill will not only increase the investment in precision agriculture, but it will also emphasize an educational process that will assist all farmers in adopting precision agriculture technologies and applications.

Emerging technologies in production agriculture are changing and improving the way farmers produce food and fiber in this country. New technologies such as global positioning satellites field mapping, georeference information systems, grid soil sampling, variable rate seeding and input applications, portable electronic pest scouting, on-the-go yield monitoring, and computerized field history and record keeping are just a few of the next generation technological tools in use today.

These technologies allow the agriculture producer to adjust hundreds of variables in the farm field, form soil pH to nutrient levels to crop yield, on a 2 foot by 2 foot grid that were previously far too costly to calculate for each field. Today, these technologies can map these variables and data instantaneously as an applicator or combine drives across the field. In short, each farm field using precision technology becomes a research pilot. And in the down months or winter season a farmer can collect the data from the previous growing season and adjust dozens of important agronomic variables to maximize the efficient use of all the farmers inputs: time, fuel, commercial inputs, seed rate, irrigation—the list goes on and on.

These precision farming tools are already proving to help farmers increase field productivity, improve input efficiency, protect the environment, maximize farm profitability and create computerized field histories that may help increase land values. Collectively, these and other emerging technologies are being used in a holistic, site-specific systems approach called precision agriculture. Progressive and production minded farmers are already using these technologies. In a decade, they may be as commonplace on the farm as air-conditioned tractor cabs and power steering.

Precision farming seems to offer great promise for improving production performance. Inherently, it just sounds very appealing to be able to evaluate production conditions on an individual square foot, yard, or acre basis rather than that of a whole field. It would seem that we should be able to treat any situation more appropriately the smaller the plot we are considering. There have been great strides in measuring things on the basis of smaller and smaller units on the ground than we have ever realistically envisioned in the past. Measuring yields as we harvest. Being able to collect soil samples on a very small pilot basis and apply prescribed corrective measures "on the go." All of these things are possible. They are being done on an experimental basis in many locations. Some producers have adopted the new technology and are using it.

Precision farming is, in its simplest sense, a management system for crop production that uses site-specific data to maximize yields and more efficiently use inputs. The technology is quickly gaining acceptance and use by producers, farm suppliers, crop consultants, and custom applicators.

Precision farming links the data-management abilities of computers with sophisticated farm equipment that can vary applications rates and monitor yields throughout a field.

Mr. President, the capabilities of precision agriculture technologies are rapidly increasing. The economic and environmental benefits of these technologies have not been fully realized. Increasing the use of these technologies and development of complementary new technologies will benefit American agriculture, the U.S. economy, and both domestic and global environmental concerns. In Kentucky, this type of research can help producers increase their yield while protecting environmental concerns such as water quality.•

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 1976. A bill to authorize the President to enter into a trade agreement concerning Northern Ireland and certain border counties of the Republic of Ireland, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

THE NORTHERN IRELAND FREE TRADE, DEVELOPMENT AND SECURITY ACT

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I introduce the Northern Ireland Free Trade, Development and Security Act.

The resurgence of sectarian unrest that we have witnessed in the last weeks in Northern Ireland has seriously jeopardized the chances of a lasting peace in that province. The current uncertainty brought about by the recent confrontation between the Catholic and Protestant communities does not augur well for the prospect of a prosperous and progressive Northern Ireland adhering to the principles of democracy, restraint and mutual respect.

Throughout the six counties the ancient drums of a harsh and unbending history have been once again been replaced by the fierce and acrimonious sounds of cross community hatred. Shattering glass and car bombs have once more become part and parcel of daily life in parts of Northern Ireland.

Mr. President, voices throughout Ireland continually echo the need for restraint and reconciliation. These are the voices of Northern Ireland's future. Voices which for so long have fallen on deaf ears. These voices Mr. President must be heard. It is in everyones self-interest to go forward. It is in no ones self-interest to slow down the peace process. Sadly this process may have come to a grinding halt, sadly too, the good and honest people of Northern Ireland will once again be the victims of a tyranny of violence and intransigence. The legislation that I introduce today is a marker that says that the men and women of Ulster are not alone in this period of instability and hour of need. We must verify hope, not concede to dispair.

Mr. President, the Northern Ireland and Border Counties Free Trade, Development and Security Act, that I introduce today, is modeled on the Gaza/West Bank Free Trade Act pending in this body. Both bills are based on the premise that a country or region that has a vibrant, growing and exporting economy requires underlying economic and social cohesion and cooperation. The legislation that I am introducing promises an open, liberalizing trade arrangement between Northern Ireland, the border counties of the Irish Republic and the United States. It will act as a primary inducement and incentive for indigenous Irish business to trade and flourish. This program will mean real jobs for the people of Northern Ireland, jobs that will prove to be crucial if the improvement of social and economic life in the North of Ireland is to be realized. In doing so, it will not only assist in revitalizing Northern Ireland's economy but it will help to rid Ulster of the religious and racial hatred which has plagued its people for more than 300 years.

Mr. President, the paradox of Northern Ireland is that she has given so much to other cultures and lands but has been incapable of fully reaping the rewards of her own peoples skills and strengths at home. The unfortunate reality is that as in the Republic of Ireland, a large majority of the North's highly educated and skilled younger generation has been forced to emigrate due to high unemployment levels which are as high as 70 percent in some areas. These disadvantaged areas are the ones which this legislation has been especially designed to target. Joint cooperation and joint economic development between the United States, Northern Ireland, and the European Union will integrate the most distressed parts of Northern Ireland and the border counties into a dynamic economy that—while firmly rooted in the European Union—continues to expand and cement new trading relatonships beneficial to all trading partners.

Mr. President the coming days in Northern Ireland will mean that serious risks will have to be taken. The way forward is not entirerly clear. Great strains have been placed between our good friends Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland. A close and harmonious relationship between these two nations is a necessary prerequisite to future progress in Northern Ireland. I would ask both of these close friends to join this effort to help forge a new and innovative way forward for their own citizens. Indeed current events call for new approaches, new modalities, and reinvigorated efforts.

To the men and women of Northern Ireland and the border counties, I say that your best days are in front of you. Stand steadfastly. Both communities can work together to create a future that will outshine Northern Ireland's dark but proud past and will significantly increase the prospects for the youth of Northern Ireland who hold the key to the success of this project. Take from your past the virtues of your forefathers—industry, faith, and imagination but leave behind the quarrels of other centuries. Just like the unity of Catholic and Protestant at the Somme, I ask that those heroic deeds be emanated. This time ahead will take courage, strength, and determination on all sides. I remind you once more you are not alone. As this country stood by you at the Somme this country stands by you now.

Northern Ireland's peace process must move forward and the aspirations and goodwill of the vast majority of its citizens must be accompanied by hard work and endeavour. The proposed establishment of a free trade area in these designated areas must be passed into legislation if the predicted 3,000 to 10,000 jobs are to be created. A more prosperous economy with more evenly spread and meaningful job opportunities can only serve to bridge the social and economic disparities that exist in this region. In conclusion this opportunity cannot be overlooked, after 25 years since the outbreak of the "troubles," the people of Northern Ireland have suffered enough violence and depravity. Now it is time to embark on a rebuilding process that will give no chance to the terrorist but every chance to peace and reconciliation.●

TRIBUTE TO AMERICAN LEGION POST No. 88 AS THEY DEDICATE THEIR WAR MEMORIAL

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize American Legion Post No. 88 as they dedicate a memorial to our Nation's veterans. Post No. 88 undertook the creation and dedication of this war memorial to mark their 50th anniversary. This emblem of service will endure as a reminder of the veterans' sacrifice made for our liberty.

On July 4, Post No. 88 dedicated a demilitarized M60A3 tank and placed it on permanent display at South Village Road in Louden, NH. Joining the legionnaires in this solemn occasion were local Boy Scouts and Cub Scouts, young musicians, local clergy, and town leaders. The monument was dedicated to the memory of those veterans who served their country, with a special remembrance for POW's and MIA's.

Our veterans have made it possible for us to live free in this great country. The strong, sound granite of the memorial stone, cut from our New Hampshire hills, is representative of America's best and bravest. The men and women who have served this country in the Armed Forces will be honored through this memorial and the community will remember their service and their sacrifice.

This monument is just one of many examples of the way American Legion Post No. 88 serves their community. Members of the post donate countless volunteer hours, fundraising for veterans' needs, support youth education, and assist the medically needy. Post No. 88 has been an integral part of the community for the past 50 years and has served the community with dedication and with pride. I congratulate American Legion Post No. 88 for their service and dedication to their community. The new war memorial is a fitting tribute to our Nation's veterans and another fine example of Post No. 88's commitment to honoring our Armed Forces.•

CHIEF JUSTICE ROBERT N. WILENTZ

• Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, on July 1, an era came to an end, when Robert N. Wilentz removed his robe for the final time and ended a 17-year tenure as chief justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court.

During a rare interview in 1993, when asked how the Wilentz years would be remembered, he replied, "I would hope only that they would be remembered as years when a great court system was kept great and when a great supreme court was kept great." And they will be, due to the efforts of a truly great man—Chief Justice Robert N. Wilentz.

Greatness is based not on what you gain, but on what you give. And the contributions of Justice Wilentz to the legal profession and to the people of New Jersey are a benchmark against which the actions of others will be judged. An old Latin saying notes that justice must be fair and good; while Justice Wilentz wore the judicial robes, he assured both.

He has been categorized as a liberal activist, but that is not entirely fair, for Justice Wilentz's decisions were not based on any political agenda, but on a mixture of extraordinary intellect and unusual compassion.

Under his direction, the New Jersey Supreme Court achieved a national reputation for innovative decisions which often set an example for the entire country. The court instructed municipalities that they must provide housing for low-income residents. In separate opinions, which Wilentz authored, the court recognized the "battered woman's syndrome" as a defense for women charged with homicide and made a host liable for providing alcohol to a guest, if the host is aware that the guest is intoxicated and will soon drive.

In the now famous Abbot versus Burke decision, which ordered the State to provide more money for city schools, Wilentz wrote, "We realize that perhaps nothing short of substantial social and economic change will make the difference for these students, * * *. We have concluded, however, that even if not a cure, money will help, and that these students are constitutionally entitled to that help." Like all of his statements, this one demonstrates that behind the black robes was a daring thinker and visionary jurist.

We may not agree with all of his decisions, but we must recognize his desire to always do what he believed to be right, and just.

Since Chief Justice Wilentz's appointment by Governor Brendan Byrne in 1979, the New Jersey Supreme Court has been involved in an extraordinary number of such precedent setting cases. Yet, in nearly three quarters of these cases, the decisions were unanimous; this is a testament to the chief justice's leadership abilities.

Justice Wilentz was not only a superior jurist and leader, but a skillful administrator. As chief justice, he tirelessly worked to improve the State's municipal court system. To enhance efficiency, he reorganized the courts into four divisions, civil, criminal, family, and general equity, and he divided the appellate division into eight four judge panels.

Under his guidance, the court instituted the New Jersey Judicial College, the Municipal Court Judicial Conference and a speedy trial program; all have become national models. He also created separate task forces to investigate gender bias in the court system and to address minority concerns involving the judiciary.

James Bryant Conant once remarked, "each walk of life, has its own elite, its own aristocracy based on excellence of performance." And recently, the Newark Star-Ledger confirmed that "his [Wilentz] record for excellence is secure and his place in New Jersey's history is fixed." I echo that opinion. All New Jerseyans have benefited from his leadership, his scholarship, his statesmanship.

Chief Justice Robert N. Wilentz will long be remembered for his love of the law, his reasoned eloquence and his uncompromising commitment to social justice. It will indeed be difficult to fill his shoes, and his robe.•

TRIBUTE TO MAX M. FISHER

• Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, Max M. Fisher was honored last night in Detroit at the National Republican Leadership Award Dinner. Unfortunately, votes here in the Senate prevented me from attending. I am particularly sorry to have missed this event because I hold Max in the highest possible esteem. Max Fisher's life exemplifies all that is good about our Nation and our people.

Max joined with two partners to form his own oil company, Aurora Gasoline, in 1933, only 3 years after graduating from college. He became chairman of the board of Aurora in 1957 and went on to serve on the board of directors of Marathon oil in 1962. Max has served on the board of directors of numerous corporations and continues to serve on the boards of Comerica and Sotheby's.

I can think of no man who has done more for his community than Max Fisher. He has served as founding chairman of Detroit Renaissance, founding member and former chairman of New Detroit, member of the board of Sinai Hospital, and in numerous other responsible positions helping individuals and communities.

Central to Max's philanthropic mission has been his heroic efforts on behalf of Israel and world Jewry. He has served as chairman of the board of governors of the reconstituted Jewish Agency in Jerusalem, General Chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, Chairman of the Board of United Israel Appeal, and President of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds.

In political life as well, Max has made great contributions. He has been an advisor and supporter of the last four Republican Presidents. In addition, he has been a supporter of the Republican National Committee for more than 40 years.

We on the Republican side of the aisle owe our own special debt to Max. But all of America, as well as Israel and numerous persons around the world, owe him our thanks. With this statement I pay tribute to a great man, whose life's efforts demonstrate the awesome impact one individual can have on his surroundings.•

THE 1997 DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS BILL

• Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate completed action on the fiscal year 1997 Defense appropriations bill. This is one of the most important annual appropriations bills and the largest; by itself it consumes about half of all discretionary spending. I had deep concerns about the bill because it added more than $10 billion to the President's request for defense. By my estimation this money was not necessary for our national security, especially when we are cutting nearly every other discretionary spending account as we move toward a balanced budget. I remain unconvinced that our defenses need vast infusions of new funds, and I disagree with some of defense priorities so ardently advocated by the majority.

Ballistic missile defenses receive $3.3 billion in this bill, which is $855 million above what the president requested. I don't think there is anyone in this Chamber who would argue against developing and deploying missile defense systems to protect our troops in the field. But many of my colleagues are anxious to embark on a missile defense spending spree that the Congressional Budget Office estimates could cost up to $60 billion. I would say to them that not only would that be a waste of taxpayer money, but could have the long-term effect of squeezing other necessary defense programs from the defense budget. It would be ironic if those who profess to care so much about our defenses end up undermining them instead.

I voted for a series of unsuccessful amendments to cut billions of dollars from both the Defense authorization and appropriations bills. However, I did vote for final passage of the Defense appropriations bill. While I disagree with the overall spending figures in the bill, Senators STEVENS and INOUYE did an excellent job of crafting legislation which will best serve our military. In particular, I am pleased that the bill includes $150 million for peer-reviewed breast cancer research, and $100 million for prostate cancer research. In addition, the bill provides a full 3 percent pay raise for our troops, as well as a 4 percent raise in the basic allowance for quarters. Finally, I worked hard to have money added to the bill so that Air National Guard F-16 units can maintain a cost-effective force structure.

In closing, I look forward to the results of the nonpartisan, independent National Defense Panel created by a 100 to nothing vote during the debate on the DOD authorization bill. This Commission will be tasked with reviewing our current defense program, and give an independent assessment of a variety of possible force structures through 2010. We owe it to the Nation to put the Defense Department through the same budgetary scrutiny that we are putting virtually every other category of Government spending.•

ISABEL STUDENT HONORED

• Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention the outstanding efforts of a young man from my home State. Ryan Maher is a senior from Isabel High School in Isabel, SD. Recently, Ryan placed second in his region and first in the State competitions to advance to the national competition for National History Day.

National History Day is a 5-day event held in June at the University of Maryland in College Park. The annual competition is now entering its third decade. Today, 400,000 students and 50,000 teachers and media specialists participate. National History Day is an excellent way to encourage students to be more active in learning United States history.

Every year National History Day is centered around a specific theme. The theme of this year's competition was "Taking a Stand." There are two levels of competition, the junior level is 6th through 8th grades and the senior division includes grades 9 through 12. Categories include research paper, group or individual presentation, display presentation, or performance.

Ryan competed in the senior division with a display presentation entitled, "Dakota Farmer: Battling the Elements." Like other students who were a part of the competition, he spent countless hours researching and developing his project. He incorporated interviews with his grandfather and other farmers from the area, together with old photographs, to tell the history of working South Dakota land. Ryan became interested in the subject after he had written a paper on farming and the dust bowl years of the thirties. This was the second time Ryan participated in the nationwide competition.

Ryan won the honor of having his project displayed in the Smithsonian Museum of American History on Wednesday, June 12, 1996. Projects were judged on several criteria, including relation to annual theme, analysis of information, and historical perspective. The honor of having one's work displayed in the Smithsonian Museum of American History and earning the trip to our Nation's Capital are great rewards to students such as Ryan. I highly commend Ryan Maher for his outstanding academic efforts.•

JOHN S. WATSON, SR.

• Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, on July 6, former New Jersey Assemblyman John S. Watson, Sr. died of cancer. A committed public official and compassionate private individual, he will be missed by the entire New Jersey community.

Watson's life was a series of firsts. He was a public official for 23 years, serving at both the county and State level. In 1970, he became the first African-American member of the Board of Chosen Freeholders in Mercer County. Seven years later, he became the first black freeholder in New Jersey to be chosen president of a county freeholder board. In 1981, he was elected to the New Jersey Assembly where he represented the 15th District for 12 years. His career in the legislature was capped by being named chairman of the Assembly Appropriations Committee in 1992; he was the first African-American in the country to hold such a position.

During his years in the Assembly, John also served on the Housing Committee, the Legislative Advisory Committee on Arts and Furnishings, and the New Jersey Capital Budgeting and Planning Commission. As a legislator, he successfully sponsored measures to create the minority opportunity skills training program, a college based computer training program, and the New Jersey pre-college program for high school students.

Assemblyman Watson consistently supported State aid to urban areas, tax reform and programs for the elderly and poor. He successfully fought to establish a rainy day fund to reserve budget surpluses for times when revenue declined. He was also known for his unfailing courtesy to those on both sides of the political aisle.

But if that is how John Watson will be remembered in Trenton, his district will remember him as a caring man who used his political power to aid individuals and families in need. New Jersey will indeed miss his service and his spirit.

The great humanitarian Albert Schweitzer remarked, "One thing I know: the only ones among you who will be really happy are those who will have sought and found how to serve."

If that is true, then John S. Watson, Sr. was indeed the happiest of men.•

TRIBUTE TO MOLLY PHELAN OF COLORADO, GIRL SCOUT GOLD AWARD WINNER

• Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, today I would like to recognize 17-year-old Molly Phelan of Estes Park, CO. On June 29, 1996, Molly was honored with the Girl Scout Gold Award from the Mountain Prairie Girl Scout Council in Colorado. The Gold Award is the highest honor achieved in U.S. Girl Scouting and is awarded to young women between the ages of 14 and 17, or in grades 9 through 12. To be eligible for this award, one must display outstanding achievement in the areas of leadership, community service, career planning, and personal development. Additionally, a Girl Scout must earn the Career Exploration Pin, four interest patches, the Senior Girl Scout Leadership Award, and complete a Gold Award Project of her own creation.

Molly has made outstanding contributions in each of these areas. As a senior at Estes Park High School and a devoted member of Girl Scout Troop 642, Molly completed numerous projects throughout the year. For her Gold Award Project, Molly was an active member of the Death-Day Program at her high school which recognizes those who have died in drinking and driving accidents. She took this issue a step further by making public service announcements on the radio about drinking and driving awareness.

Molly truly exhibits concern for her community and a desire to improve the world around her. She is an excellent role model for all youth and displays genuine leadership through her Girl Scout projects. I am proud to salute Molly as a recipient of the prestigious Girl Scout Gold Award.•

TRIBUTE TO CHRISTINE ZAMBRICKI

• Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to pay tribute today to one of my constituents, Christine Zambricki. Ms. Zambricki will conclude her year as national president of the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists [AANA] in August and I want to take this opportunity to congratulate her on this fine achievement.

Ms. Zambricki has had a distinguished career. She currently serves as assistant hospital director at William Beaumont Hospital in Royal Oak, MI, and concurrently serves as director of the nurse anesthesia track, graduate program in nursing at Oakland University in Rochester, MI. Previously she served as director of anesthesia services from 1989 to 1992 and director of nursing from 1992 to 1993 at William Beaumont Hospital.

In addition to these prestigious positions in the medical community, she has held various other high-level medical positions, earned various nursing degrees, and has received many other honors. Just a few of her credits in her profession and in academia include service as president of the Michigan Nurses Association from 1985 to 1987, being appointed by the Governor of Michigan to serve on various State boards, and receiving her master of science in nurse anesthesia in 1980 from Wayne State University.

She has been published extensively and her presentations are far too numerous to list. However, it is clear that her contributions to the nurse anesthesia profession as well as nursing in general has been substantial. Ms. Zambricki has been an outstanding president of her organization—AANA. As you may know, Mr. President, AANA is the professional association that represents over 26,000 certified registered nurse anesthetists [CRNA's] which is 96 percent of the nurse anesthetists in the United States.

As anesthesia specialists, CRNA's administer more than 65 percent of the 26 million anesthetics given to patients in the United States each year. CRNA's are the sole anesthesia providers in 85 percent of rural hospitals, enabling these medical facilities to provide obstetrical, surgical, and trauma stabilization services. CRNA's are also frontline providers of anesthesia in underserved urban areas, providing services for major trauma cases, for example.

It is clear that the AANA has been fortunate to have benefited from Ms. Zambricki's outstanding service as president and I take special pride in congratulating one of Michigan's own for having assumed this difficult yet rewarding professional obligation on behalf of nurse anesthesia. I am certain that Ms. Zambricki has many more years ahead of her in which she will undoubtedly make further contributions to the honored profession of nurse anesthesia. Congratulations Christine on your year as president of the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists.•

TRIBUTE TO RICH DEVOS

• Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, last night Rich DeVos was honored in Detroit at the National Republican Leadership Award Dinner. Unfortunately, votes here in the Senate prevented me from attending. I am particularly sorry to have missed this event because I hold Rich in the highest possible esteem. His life's story is a continuing series of examples to us all of strong character, hard work, and principled generosity.

After serving his country in the Air Force in World War II, Rich co-founded a flying school and commercial air charter service with Jay Van Andel. Three years later he co-founded an import business with the same partner. In 1959, he and his partner founded the Amway Corp. That venture grew to be one of the world's largest direct selling companies, recording $6.3 billion in sales last year. Rich is also owner and chairman of the NBA's Orlando Magic basketball team.

Having succeeded through his own hard work, Rich has devoted more and more of his time to helping others. His speeches and books spread the word about compassionate capitalism, and he leads by example. He serves on numerous boards, including service as chairman of Gospel Films and the Butterworth Health Corp. He has given freely of his time and money for charitable organizations such as the National Organization on Disability, and for the cause of political and economic liberty.

Rich is the recipient of literally dozens of prestigious awards, including the Adam Smith Free Enterprise Award from the American Legislative Exchange Council and the William Booth Award from the Salvation Army. He is a great friend to liberty, a great servant to those in need and a great credit to the state of Michigan. I, for one, have always been inspired by his work and his character; Rich DeVos is indeed one of our Nation's true heroes.•

GOV. WILLIAM T. CAHILL

• Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, on July 1, New Jersey lost one of its most dedicated public servants, former Gov. William T. Cahill. Whether as a New Jersey assemblyman, U.S. Congressman or Governor, Bill Cahill was always ready to fight for what he thought was right, regardless of whether it was expedient or popular. As he once remarked:

> It's not the role of the Governor to do what is popular. His role is to tell the people what's good for New Jersey.

Undeniably, Governor Cahill was good for New Jersey.

A blue collar Irish kid from a gritty Camden neighborhood, Governor Cahill was described by both friends and foes as a fighter; he continually battled for the environment, for education, for fairness in the tax system. In fact, his single term, from 1970 to 1974, is remarkable for the number of successful initiatives which he left as his legacy to New Jersey.

Governor Cahill was in the vanguard of both the environmental and the consumer protection movements. He created the State Department of Environmental Protection, the Division of Consumer Affairs and the Board of Public Utilities. During his administration, the State passed the Coastal Area Facility Review Act to block construction of proposed offshore oil refineries and high-rise buildings. Cahill also fought for a series of unprecedented wetlands protection laws and strong air pollution control measures.

His legacy has touched virtually every aspect of life in the Garden State. The Governor's initiatives led to the Nation's first daily lottery, which yielded new revenues to ease the burden on New Jersey's taxpayers. During his tenure, Cahill helped get no-fault auto insurance enacted and established full-time county prosecutors. He more than quadrupled State aid to New Jersey's economically challenged cities.

Bill Cahill never shied away from a fight that he thought would benefit New Jersey. He even criticized then President Nixon, a fellow Republican, for not paying attention to domestic problems such as those that existed in Newark.

In probably his best remembered role, Governor Cahill scored the ultimate touchdown for New Jersey. He helped to establish the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority and the Meadowlands Sports Complex, and he personally intervened to lure the Giants to the new stadium. When the New York financial community tried to ruin the deal, Cahill took the negotiations into overtime; he worked with the incoming Democratic administration to assure that New Jersey companies would finance the enormous project.

Yet, some of Bill Cahill's most impressive accomplishments have largely been forgotten. On Thanksgiving Day, 1971, a violent inmate uprising erupted at Rahway State Prison. The memories of the Attica riot, only a few months before, still lingered in the public's and the inmates' minds. Cahill immediately went to the prison; his constant intervention, negotiation and steadying influence was credited with ending the riot, without a single life lost. He was hailed as a national hero for preventing Rahway from becoming another Attica.

With all of his achievements, Bill Cahill could have rested on his laurels and perhaps easily won reelection to a second term as Governor in 1974. Instead, because he believed it was the right thing to do, he launched the ongoing battle in New Jersey over education financing.

While Governor, Cahill was the prime defendant in a 1973 case where the State Supreme Court ruled that the system of funding education through property taxes discriminated against children in poor districts. Due to the ruling, the State enacted the Thorough and Efficient Education Act. But the Governor was not finished.

The New Jersey tax system, with its heavy reliance on property taxes, had always bothered Cahill. Specifically, the Governor wanted a broad-based income tax and an equalized State property tax. The income tax would be used to fund public education and, hopefully, would reduce inequities between rich and poor school districts. In essence, the Governor's dream was to give all children a chance at a decent education.

So he tossed a politically risky revision of the tax code into the political ring. He pushed the State legislature for an income tax and an equalized State property tax. The legislature, however, took the gloves off and slaughtered the plan in the assembly.

The promotion of the very unpopular tax, coupled with scandals in his administration, none of which ever directly involved or implicated him, ended Bill Cahill's career in government. He lost the Republican nomination for Governor in 1974. But when reflecting on his decision to attempt to revise the tax code, the courageous decision which cost him his political career, Cahill remarked,

> We were right then, and while many describe it as our worst defeat, I believe it was our finest moment.

During those years in the Governor's office, Cahill demonstrated that he was a pragmatist, not a partisan. He often appointed Democrats to key positions, if he thought they could best serve New Jersey. These included former Governor Richard Hughes as chief justice of the State supreme court and future Gov. Brendan Byrne to the State superior court.

The only thing that Governor Cahill was ever uncompromisingly partisan about was the State he loved. Early in his term, he was on a commercial flight from Washington to Newark. When the plane landed, the flight attendant welcomed everyone to the Port of New York. The very next day, Cahill was on the phone to officials at the Port Authority of New York, which operates Newark International Airport. Shortly afterward, the Port Authority redesignated itself "The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey." Among New Jersey's champions, he was always a heavyweight.

Whether we agree with his decisions and priorities or not, Governor Cahill was a man who stood by his convictions, no matter what the consequences. As he once told an aide, forget about politics for a minute. What's the right thing to do? His concern was policy, not politics.

Thomas Fuller once noted that "Great and good are seldom the same man." He obviously never knew William T. Cahill. In his continual striving to do what was right, he proved himself a great Governor, and a great man. Undeniably, he always fought the good fight for New Jersey.•

THOMAS J. COOGAN

• Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise to honor the memory of Thomas J. Coogan, the longtime mayor of Melvindale, MI, who passed away on December 11, 1995. Tom had been fighting lung cancer and back problems since January 1995, while valiantly continuing to fulfill his duties as mayor. A month before his death, Tom won an unprecedented 11th term as mayor. During his 20-year career as mayor of Melvindale, Tom Coogan's name became synonymous with the city.

He was an activist mayor who became involved in many causes he felt would benefit the residents of Melvindale. He championed environmental initiatives and directed the building of several parks and a recreation center. He also provided leadership in the diversification of the city's industrial base and the construction of a city hall complex. Tom was an advocate for senior-citizen rights and introduced several programs for older residents.

One of Tom's proudest achievements was the construction of a senior citizens' building named Coogan Terrace in his honor. He was the driving force behind this center which has benefited so many of Melvindale's elderly. It is a fitting tribute to Tom that this building which bears his name will continue serving the people of Melvindale long after he has left us.

During his fight with cancer, Tom was forced to close the barbershop he opened in 1965 in order to continue working as mayor. The barbershop served him well as a "mini city hall" where he always made himself available to the people of Melvindale. It was this ability to communicate well with people that made Coogan such an effective mayor.

I know that my Senate colleagues join me in honoring the passing of this great mayor and man, Thomas J. Coogan.•

ORDER FOR STAR PRINT—REPORT NO. 104–319

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that report number 104–319 be star printed with the changes that I understand are at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZING EXTENSION OF MFN TREATMENT TO THE PRODUCTS OF ROMANIA

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of H.R. 3161, which was received from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3161) to authorize the extension of nondiscriminatory treatment (most-favored-nation treatment) to the products of Romania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 3161, a bill to extend permanent most-favored-nation trade status to Romania. I believe it is premature to surrender leverage over developments in Romania less than 4 months before their national elections. Adoption of this measure now will weaken our ability to extend support to democratic forces in Romania.

I spoke in opposition to the Senate version of this measure, S. 1644, when the Finance Committee held a hearing on it on June 4, 1996. Before that, as Co-Chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I joined with our Chairman, the distinguished Representative CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH, in a letter to the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in the House, urging postponement of action on this initiative until after Romania's elections.

On Wednesday, the House passed H.R. 3161, after a spirited debate on the previous day. Their action, and the likely passage of this bill by this Chamber, surrenders leverage over developments in Romania which is uniquely ours. The semi-annual review process for Romania's most-favored-nation gives Congress the ability to express itself if the slow but steady progress with democratization and privatization that has been occurring in Romania should suffer a reverse after this fall's election.

I do not need to recite the horrors that occurred in the former Yugoslavia, just over the border from Romania when extremists seized control of the political process. Genocide in Bosnia has not yet been redressed, and thousands of American troops are deployed there on the ground to help the Dayton Accords succeed.

Romania has a substantial ethnic minority population. Approximately 9 percent of Romania's population of 23 million is ethnically Hungarian. Relations between ethnic Hungarians and Romanians have not always been easy.

The current Romanian Government is a coalition government. It contained three extremist minority parties for 3 of its 4 years in office, with two leaving the government only this past December.

All of the experts I have spoken with, and all knowledgeable Romanian officials believe that the next government will be a coalition government, too. I think it is very important for those who support democratic progress and privatization in Romania to keep a close eye on these national elections and the government they produce.

The opposition did very well in this spring's local elections. This bodes well for their chances in the fall, but it appears that no single party has the strength or public support to form a government on its own. Even if the opposition wins, this does not resolve the question of who will be included in the coalition government.

Romania has made clear that its first priority in its foreign relations is NATO integration. They view passage of this measure and receipt of unconditional MFN status as a step in this direction, a credential that they have made progress.

I have no trouble saying that they have made progress. Measured since Ceaucescu's fall, the progress has been serious. Over a shorter time-frame, it sometimes appears to be one step forward and two steps back, but it is progress nonetheless.

Having said that, there are also problems. I think these problems are serious enough for Congress to want to keep the leverage it has through the semi-annual MFN report and review process until after this fall's national elections. Then, once we see how the elections have turned out, who is in the coalition government, and what their policies will be, we can make a well-considered judgment on whether to terminate the review process and make their MFN trade status unconditional. Action now is premature.

I know that the Romanian Assembly and Senate both passed resolutions stating that all parties agreed that MFN would not be a political issue in the fall campaign. I ask you to imagine what would happen if both our House and Senate passed a resolution stating, for instance, that NAFTA would not be a campaign issue.

In a nation with a free press, passage of such a resolution would have the immediate effect of moving the issue to the top of the political agenda, and focusing hard questions on the leadership of both parties. It would not take the issue off of the agenda.

I received a copy of a May 27, 1996 letter from the president of the Democratic Alliance of Hungarians in Romania, the DAHR, which states, "In the opinion of the DAHR, the entire population of Romania has great need of Most Favored Nation status, but we believe that the best method for the American government would be to continue to link this benefit to respect for human rights and minority rights until such time as practical results are achieved in these areas."

Mr. President, it does not sound to me as if there is unanimous support within Romania for pressing ahead with unconditional MFN. In fact, the ethnic minority most vulnerable to oppression and discrimination, and the one that has suffered serious human rights violations in the past, is the very one that asks the United States to retain the MFN review process.

I received another letter from the Ad Hoc Committee for the Organization of Romanian Democracy, Inc. That letter, dated July 15, 1996, points out shortcomings in the property restitution and compensation process in Romania, and talks about developments in a human rights case.

In that regard, it states, "To further emphasize the injustices of the present Romanian regime, we wish also to inform you that we have just received a fax from Romania informing us about two newspapermen, Radu Mazare, Chief Editor and Constantin Cumpana, Chief of Section, of the Telegraph, from the city of Constanta, who have just been sentenced for slander to 7 months in prison and a fine of 25 million lei (approx. $8000)."

Their letter continues, "In view of the above injustices, the Committee appeals to you, Senator D'AMATO, to consent to urging the postponement, until after the Romanian Presidential-Parliamentary elections in September-October 1996, of debates and voting in respect to the granting of permanent MFN status to Romania."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Democratic Alliance of Hungarians in Romania's letter and the Ad Hoc Commmittee's letter be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. D'AMATO. Let me continue by pointing out some other problems in Romania. Rights of national minorities to receive an education in their native languages have been restricted by the Romanian education law of July 24, 1995, and the government has not supported the opening of an independent Hungarian university.

An ethnic Hungarian, Pal Cseresznyes, remains in jail on questionable charges, an imprisonment that has lasted for 6 years and during which he allegedly suffered frequent beatings.

I am concerned by reports that the local elections revealed serious inaccuracies in voter lists, a problem that had been identified by international observers in previous elections and that the government has had time to repair. Those same inaccurate lists appear to be going to be used this fall. Use of those lists could call into question public trust in the results of the national election.

Mr. President, I regret that this measure has moved forward with such speed. I note that it was not referred to committee. Its consideration now coincides with the visit to the United States of the Romanian Foreign Minister, Mr. Teodor Melescanu. It appears that part of the rush to judgment this effort reflects is to produce a victory on this issue for the President of Romania, Ion Iliescu. Regardless of the protestations of parliamentarians and Romanian officials to the contrary, I firmly expect that passage of this measure will immediately be touted as a great victory for Romania.

I hope that it will not, in fact, be a defeat for human rights, democracy, and free enterprise in Romania. I will watch the results of this election closely, and I join with those who support this bill in hoping that their results will justify the faith passage of this measures represents. I have, however, found that hope, when dealing with entrenched Balkan issues, is seldom well rewarded.

I will be watching to see who is in the resulting coalition government and what policies they adopt. While passage of this bill will end the MFN review process, inclusion of Romania in NATO will require additional steps. Without the MFN review process leverage, if the elections produce negative results, the consequences in terms of U.S. policy will have to be more severe.

HUNGARIANS IN RUMANIA,
Bucharest, May 27, 1996.

Mr. LÁSZIÉ HÁMOS,
President, Hungarian Human Rights Foundation, New York, NY.

DEAR MR. HÁMOS: Responding to your question of last week, this is to inform you that the position of the Democratic Alliance of Hungarians in Rumania (DAHR) is contained in the enclosed statements adopted by the DAHR Senators and DAHR Deputies, respectively.

We personally contain the position contained in these statements to Representative Tom Lantos as well, during his April visit in Rumania. We made it clear that there has been no progress on the minority question in Rumania, but that the government and Parliament have instituted discriminatory measures in the areas of education and language use. We emphasized that the marked regression on legislative matters pertaining to minorities—Education Law. Law on Local Administration, Criminal Code—clearly demonstrates that Rumania wishes to be a state of and for the majority nationality, according to ethnic criteria, to the detriment of national minorities.

In the opinion of the DAHR, the entire population of Rumania has great need of Most Favored Nation status, but we believe that the best method for the American government would be to continue to link this benefit to respect for human rights and minority rights until such time as practical results are achieved in these areas.

Very truly yours,
BÉLA MARKÓ, President.

AD HOC COMMITTEE FOR THE ORGANIZATION OF ROMANIAN DEMOCRACY, INC.,
Mount Vernon, NY, July 15, 1996.

Hon. ALFONSE D'AMATO,
U.S. Senate, HSOB, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR D'AMATO: At the request of the owners of the properties nationalized-confiscated by decrees in 1949, we are forwarding to you the English translation of the memorandum addressed to President Iliescu of Romania and submitted and registered at the office of the President. The signatory is Mrs. Alexandrina Ionescu, Strada Franceza No. 56, Bucharest 3.

The gist of the memorandum, condensed in a few sentences, is as follows: By sentence of Lower Courts of Justice, Mrs. Ionescu and other owners obtained the restitution of property. They complied with all the prescribed legal requirements by paying the taxes and registering the legal deeds of property with the appropriate authority. Nevertheless, the Attorney General has started proceedings to annul the decisions of the Lower Courts.

The attached memorandum, translated into English and French, has also been submitted to the United Nations and the Council of Europe.

To further emphasize the injustices of the present Romanian regime, we wish to also inform you that we have just received a fax from Romania informing us about two newspaper men, Radu Mazare, Chief Editor and Constantin Cumpana, Chief of Section, of the Telegraph, from the city of Constanta, who have just been sentenced for slander to seven months in prison and a fine of 25 million lei (approx. $8000).

In view of the above injustices, the Committee appeals to you, Senator D'Amato, to consent to urging the postponement, until after the Romanian presidential-Parliamentary elections in September–October 1996, of debates and voting in respect to the granting of permanent MFN status to Romania.

We thank you, Senator D'Amato, for your consideration and understanding of the Romanian people who desire true democracy in their country.

Very truly yours,
STEFAN ISSARESCU, M.D.,
Chairman.
SIMONE M. VRABIESCU KLECKNER, J.D.,
Co-Chairman.

SENATE—Monday, July 22, 1996

The Senate met at 10 a.m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

God of all nations, Lord of all life, we thank You that You place within all of us the pursuit of excellence. The longing to be our best is stirred in us as we watch the creative competition of the Olympics in Atlanta. It is inspiring to see men and women press the limits as they go for the gold. Whether it is the 100-meter short run for lasting fame, or the daring high dive with no splash, we look on with renewed desire to live at full potential in our own responsibilities and relationships. We admire the dedication, the sacrifice, the indefatigable practice, the mastery, the joy of the Olympic athletes. Today we join the Nation in cheering Tom Dolan's gallant victory over physical limitations to win the swimming 400-meter individual medley.

Then we wonder about our own discipline in prayer, spiritual growth, and character development. What could happen in our lives if we had the commitment of these runners, gymnasts, swimmers, and team players have to their sport and their nation. Today we want to run the race of our lives, stretching every part of our being toward the high calling of serving You with excellence in our work in Government. Bless the men and women of this Senate and all of us called to work with them as we make this a day to go for the gold of glorifying You with all the intellect of our minds, the passion of our hearts, and the strength of our souls. Through our Lord and Savior. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOMENICI. This morning the Senate will immediately resume consideration of the reconciliation bill until the hour of 2 p.m. Any Senator still intending to offer an amendment to that bill must do so prior to that time. Under the consent agreement reached on Friday, all previously ordered votes on amendments as well as votes ordered today will begin at 9:30 a.m. tomorrow morning. No rollcall votes will occur today. However, all Senators should be notified that there will be a lengthy series of rollcall votes on Tuesday morning. Also, at 2 o'clock today the Senate will begin the Agriculture appropriations bill, and once again any votes ordered in relation to that bill will occur following the stacked votes at 9:30 a.m. tomorrow morning.

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY, WORK OPPORTUNITY, AND MEDICAID RESTRUCTURING ACT OF 1996

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the bill.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1956) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 202(a) of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1997.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Chafee amendment No. 4931, to maintain current eligibility standards for Medicaid and provide additional State flexibility.

Helms amendment No. 4930, to strengthen food stamp work requirements.

Graham (for Simon) amendment No. 4938, to preserve eligibility of immigrants for programs of student assistance under the Public Health Service Act.

Shelby amendment No. 4939, to provide a refundable credit for adoption expenses and to exclude from gross income employee and military adoption assistance benefits and withdrawals from IRA's for certain adoption expenses

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me summarize where we are for Senators and staffers. We have used approximately 16 of the 20-hour statutory time. Amendments can be offered and debated today between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. The amendments have to be on the general list of amendments agreed to last Thursday.

As of today, we will have disposed of over 23 amendments. We have had 10 rollcall votes and 13 voice votes. As of Friday night, we have 15 amendments pending for possible votes beginning tomorrow at 9:30, and we could add to that list today as many as another 19 amendments. I am not saying we will, but we could if all of those remaining on the agreed-on list that we agreed on Thursday night are offered today. So it is possible that beginning tomorrow we could have as many as 34 rollcall votes but certainly at least 20, not counting final passage.

It is my understanding that the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], is first. It is on that side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished Democratic whip is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 4940

(Purpose: To allow States the option to provide non-cash assistance to children after the 5-year time limit, as provided in report No. 104-430 (the conference report to H.R. 4 as passed during the 1st session of the 104th Congress)

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD] proposes an amendment numbered 4940.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 250, line 4, insert "cash" before "assistance".

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, this is an amendment that I think could almost be accepted. Although we could not agree on the Breaux amendment of last week regarding noncash assistance for children, I hope we can agree on this one. One of the reasons welfare reform is so complicated is that it is usually hard to separate the adults on welfare from the children. Many want to get tougher on the adults, especially those who have been on welfare for a long period of time. But I do not hear anyone who says get tougher on children. This amendment separates those issues because it is about how we as a Nation are ultimately responsible for the welfare of our children.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Under the Republican bill, after 5 years, States may not use any Federal block grant money to assist families whatsoever. This applies to cash and noncash benefits as well. The current bill goes much further than H.R. 4, which passed Congress last year and was vetoed by the President. In my view, this makes the bill much tougher on children. H.R. 4 prohibited cash assistance after 5 years. It did not prohibit noncash assistance like vouchers that could be used for clothing or medicine or other needs of our children.

My amendment makes this bill identical to H.R. 4 by allowing States to use Federal block grant funds to provide noncash assistance after adults on welfare have reached their 5-year limit.

If you favor State flexibility, you should support this amendment. Some supporters of this bill have said State flexibility is one of their top priorities, yet on this issue the bill is less flexible than H.R. 4. We say send this welfare reform back to the States, but yet we say: States, do it the way we tell you to do it. That is not flexibility for the States.

The National Governors' Association supports this amendment. This amendment does not increase the cost of the bill, nor add to the deficit. It deals with how the Federal block grant funds allocated to each State may be used. And so, Mr. President, in a letter dated June 26, 1996, the National Governors' Conference urged support for an amendment to apply the time limit in the bill only to cash assistance.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GOVERNORS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, June 26, 1996.

SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR FINANCE COMMITTEE MEMBER: The nation's Governors appreciate that S. 1795, as introduced, incorporated many of the National Governors' Association's (NGA) recommendations on welfare reform. NGA hopes that Congress will continue to look to the Governors' bipartisan efforts on a welfare reform policy and build on the lessons learned through a decade of state experimentation in welfare reform.

However, upon initial review of the Chairman's mark, NGA believes that many of the changes contained in the mark are contradictory to the NGA bipartisan agreement. The mark includes unreasonable modifications to the work requirement, and additional administrative burdens, restrictions and penalties that are unacceptable. Governors believe these changes in the Chairman's mark greatly restrict state flexibility and will result in increased, unfunded costs for states, while at the same time undermining states ability to implement effective welfare reform programs. These changes threaten the ability of Governors to provide any support for the revised welfare package, and may, in fact, result in Governors opposing the bill.

As you mark up the welfare provisions of S. 1795, the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996, NGA strongly urges you to consider the recommendations contained in the welfare reform policy adopted unanimously by the nation's Governors in February. Governors believe that these changes are needed to create a welfare reform measure that will foster independence and promote responsibility, provide adequate support for families that are engaged in work, and accord states the flexibility and resources they need to transform welfare into a transitional program leading to work.

Below is a partial list of amendments that may be offered during the committee markup and revisions included in the Chairman's mark that are either opposed or supported by NGA. This list is not meant to be exhaustive, and there may be other amendments or revisions of interest or concern to Governors that are not on this list. In the NGA welfare reform policy, the Governors did not take a position on the provisions related to benefits for immigrants, and NGA will not be making recommendations on amendments in these areas. As you mark up S. 1795, NGA urges you to consider the following recommendations based on the policy statement of the nation's Governors on welfare reform.

THE GOVERNORS URGE YOU TO SUPPORT THE FOLLOWING AMENDMENTS

Support the amendment to permit states to count toward the work participation rate calculation those individuals who have left welfare for work for the first six months that they are in the workforce (Breaux). The Governors believe states should receive credit in the participation rate for successfully moving people off of welfare and into employment, thereby meeting one of the primary goals of welfare reform. This will also provide states with an incentive to expand their job retention efforts.

Support the amendment that applies the time limit only to cash assistance (Breaux). S. 1795 sets a sixty-month lifetime limit on any federally funded assistance under the block grant. This would prohibit states from using the block grant for important work supports such as transportation or job retention counseling after the five-year limit. Consistent with the NGA welfare reform policy, NGA urges you to support the Breaux amendment that would apply the time limit only to cash assistance.

Support the amendment to restore funding for the Social Service Block Grant (Rockefeller). This amendment would limit the cut in the Social Services Block Grant (SSBG) to 10 percent rather than 20 percent. States use a significant portion of their SSBG funds for child care for low-income families. Thus, the additional cut currently contained in S. 1795 negates much of the increase in child care funding provided under the bill.

Support technical improvements to the contingency fund (Breaux). Access to additional matching funds is critical to states during periods of economic recession. NGA supports two amendments proposed by Senator Breaux. One clarifies the language relating to maintenance of effort in the contingency fund and another modifies the fund so states that access the contingency fund during only part of the year are not penalized with a less advantageous match rate.

Support the amendment to extend the 75 percent enhanced match rate through fiscal 1997 for statewide automated child welfare information systems (SACWIS), (Chafee, Rockefeller). Although not specifically addressed in the NGA policy, this extension is important for many states that are trying to meet systems requirements that will strengthen their child welfare and child protection efforts.

Governors urge you to oppose amendments or revisions to the Chairman's mark that would limit state flexibility, create unreasonable work requirements,impose new mandates, or encroach on the ability of each state to direct resources and design a welfare reform program to meet its unique needs.

In the area of work, Governors strongly oppose any efforts to increase penalties, increase work participation rates, further restrict what activities count toward the work participation rate or change the hours of work required. The Governors' policy included specific recommendations in these areas, many of which were subsequently incorporated into S. 1795, as introduced. The recommendations reflect a careful balancing of the goals of welfare reform, the availability of resources, and the recognition that economic and demographic circumstances differ among states. Imposing any additional limitations or modifications to the work requirements would limit state flexibility.

THE GOVERNORS URGE YOU TO OPPOSE THE FOLLOWING AMENDMENTS OR REVISIONS IN THE AREA OF WORK

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to increase the number of hours of work required per week to thirty-five hours in future years. NGA's recommendation that the work requirement be set at twenty-five hours was incorporated into S. 1795. Many states will set higher hourly requirements, but this flexibility will enable states to design programs that are consistent with local labor market opportunities and the availability of child care.

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to decrease to four weeks the number of weeks that job search can count as work. NGA supports the twelve weeks of job search contained in S. 1795, as introduced. Job search has proven to be effective when an individual first enters a program and also after the completion of individual work components, such as workfare or community service. A reduction to four weeks would limit state flexibility to use this cost-effective strategy to move recipients into work.

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to increase the work participation rates. NGA opposes any increase in the work participation rates above the original S. 1795 requirements. Many training and education activities that are currently counted under JOBS will not count toward the new work requirements. Consequently, states will face the challenge of transforming their current JOBS program into a program that emphasizes quick movement into the labor force. An increase in the work rates will result in increased costs to states for child care and work programs.

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to increase penalties for failure to meet the work participation requirements. The proposed amendment to increase the penalty by 5 percent for each consecutive failure to meet the work rate is unduly harsh, particularly given the stringent nature of the work requirements. Ironically, the loss of block grant funds due to penalties will make it even more difficult for a state to meet the work requirements.

Oppose the amendment requiring states to count exempt families in the work participation rate calculation (Gramm). This amendment would retain the state option to exempt families with children below age one from the work requirements but add the requirement that such families count in the denominator for purposes of determining the work participation rate. This penalizes states that grant the exemption, effectively eliminating this option. The exemption in S. 1795 is an acknowledgment that child care costs for infants are very high and that there often is a shortage of infant care.

Oppose the amendment to increase work hours by ten hours a week for families receiving subsidized child care (Gramm). This amendment would greatly increase child care costs as well as impose a higher work requirement on families with younger children, because families with other children—particularly teenagers—are less likely to need subsidized child care assistance.

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to exempt families with children below age eleven. S. 1795, as introduced, prohibits states from sanctioning families with children below age six for failure to participate in work if failure to participate was because of a lack of child care. This revision would raise the age to eleven. NGA is concerned that this revision effectively penalizes states because they still would be required to count these individuals in the denominator of the work participation rate.

THE GOVERNORS URGE YOU TO OPPOSE THE FOLLOWING AMENDMENTS OR REVISIONS IN THE CHAIRMAN'S MARK IN THESE ADDITIONAL AREAS

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to increase the maintenance-of-effort requirement above the 75 percent in the cash assistance block grant or further narrow the definition of what counts toward maintenance-of-effort.

Oppose the revisions in the Chairman's mark that increase state plan requirements and include additional state penalties.

Oppose the amendment to limit hardship exemption to 15 percent (Gramm). NGA policy supports the current provision in S. 1795, as introduced, that allows states to exempt up to 20 percent of their caseload from the five-year lifetime limit on benefits.

Oppose the amendment to mandate that states provide in-kind vouchers to families after a state or federal time limit on benefits is triggered (Breaux, Moseley-Braun). NGA believes that states should have the option to provide non-cash forms of assistance after the time limit, but they should not be mandated to do so.

Oppose the provision in the Chairman's mark to restrict the transferability of funds out of the cash assistance block grant to the child care block grant only. The Governors believe that it is appropriate to allow a transfer of funds into the foster care program or the Social Services Block Grant.

Oppose a family cap mandate in the Chairman's mark. NGA supports a family cap as an option, rather than a mandate, to prohibit benefits to additional children born or conceived while the parent is on welfare.

Governors urge you to consider the above recommendations.

Sincerely,

RAYMOND C. SCHEPPACH.

Mr. FORD. The administration supports this amendment, Mr. President. In a letter dated July 16, 1996, the acting OMB Director urges the adoption of voucher language that protects children.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, July 16, 1996.

Hon. JOHN R. KASICH,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing to transmit the Administration's views on the welfare provisions of H.R. 3734, the "Welfare and Medicaid Reform Act of 1996." We understand that the Rules Committee plans to separate the welfare and Medicaid portions of the bill and consider only the welfare provisions on the House floor.

We are pleased that the Congress has decided to separate welfare reform from a proposal to repeal Medicaid's guarantee of health care for the elderly, poor, pregnant and people with disabilities. We hope that removing this "poison pill" from welfare reform is a breakthrough that indicates that the Congressional leadership is serious about passing bipartisan welfare reform this year.

It is among the Administration's highest priorities to achieve bipartisan welfare reform reflecting the principles of work, family, and responsibility. For the past three and a half years, the President has demonstrated his commitment to enacting real welfare reform by working with Congress to create legislation that moves people from welfare to work, encourages responsibility, and protects children. The Administration sent to Congress a stand-alone welfare bill that requires welfare recipients to work, imposes strict time limits on welfare, toughens child support enforcement, is fair to children, and is consistent with the President's commitment to balance the budget.

The Administration is also pleased that the bill makes many of the important improvements to H.R. 4 that we recommended—improvements that were also included in the bipartisan National Governors' Association and Castle-Tanner proposals. We urge the Committee to build upon these improvements. At the same time, however, the Administration is deeply concerned about certain provisions of H.R. 3734 that would adversely affect benefits for food stamp households and legal immigrants, as well as with the need for strong State accountability and flexibility. And, the bill would still raise taxes on millions of working families by cutting the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC).

IMPROVEMENTS CONTAINED IN H.R. 3734

We appreciate the Committees' efforts to strengthen provisions that are central to work-based reform, such as child care, and to provide some additional protections for children and families. In rejecting H.R. 4, the President singled out a number of provisions that were tough on children and did too little to move people from welfare to work. H.R. 3734 includes important changes to these provisions that move the legislation closer to the President's vision of true welfare reform. We are particularly pleased with the following improvements:

Child Care. As the President has insisted throughout the welfare reform debate, child care is essential to move people from welfare to work. The bill reflects a better understanding of the child care resources that States will need to implement welfare reform, adding $4 billion for child care above the level in H.R. 4. The bill also recognizes that parents of school-age children need child care in order to work and protect the health and safety of children in care.

Food Stamps. The bill removes the annual spending cap on Food Stamps that was included in H.R. 4, preserving the program's ability to expand during periods of economic recession and help families when they are most in need.

Child Nutrition. The bill no longer includes the H.R. 4 provisions for a child nutrition block-grant demonstration, which would have undermined the program's ability to respond automatically to economic changes and maintain national nutrition standards.

Child Protection. We commend the Committee for preserving the open-ended nature of Title IV-E foster care and adoption assistance programs, current Medicaid coverage of eligible children, and the national child data collection initiative.

Supplemental Security Income (SSI). The bill removes the proposed two-tiered benefit system for disabled children receiving SSI that was included in H.R. 4, and retains full cash benefits for all eligible children.

Work Performance Bonus. We commend the Committee for giving states an incentive to move people from welfare to work by providing $1 billion in work performance bonuses by 2003. This provision is an important element of the Administration's bill, and will help change the culture of the welfare office.

Contingency Fund. The bill adopts the National Governors Association (NGA) recommendation to double the size of the Contingency Fund to $2 billion, and add a more responsive trigger based on the Food Stamp caseload changes. Further steps the Congress should take to strengthen this provision are outlined below.

Hardship Exemption. We commend the Committee for following the NGA recommendation and the Senate-passed welfare reform bill by allowing states to exempt up to 20% of hardship cases that reach the five-year time limit.

We remain pleased that Congress has decided to include central elements of the President's approach—time limits, work requirements, the toughest possible child support enforcement, requiring minor mothers to live at home as a condition of assistance—in this legislation.

The Administration strongly supports several provisions included in S. 1795, as reported by the Senate Finance Committee. These provisions include: allowing transfers only to the child care block grant, increasing the maintenance of effort requirement with a tightened definition of what counts toward this requirement, improving the fair and equitable treatment and enforcement language, and eliminating the child protection block grant. We urge the Congress to include these provisions in H.R. 3734.

KEY CONCERNS WITH H.R. 3734

The Administration however remains deeply concerned that the bill still lacks other important provisions that have earned bipartisan endorsement.

Size of the cuts. The welfare provisions incorporate most of the cuts that were in the vetoed bill—$59 billion over 6 years (including the EITC and related savings in Medicaid) over six years. These cuts far exceed those proposed by the NGA or the Administration. Cuts in Food Stamps and benefits to legal immigrants are particularly deep. The President's budget demonstrates that cuts of this size are not necessary to achieve real welfare reform, nor are they needed to balance the budget.

Food Stamps. The Administration strongly opposes the inclusion of a Food Stamp block grant, which has the potential to seriously undermine the Federal nature of the program, jeopardizing the nutrition and health of millions of children, working families, and the elderly, and eliminating the program's ability to respond to economic changes. The Administration is also concerned that the bill makes deep cuts in the Food Stamp program, including a cut in benefits to households with high shelter costs that disproportionately affects families with children, and a four-month time limit on childless adults who are willing to work, but are not offered a work slot.

Legal Immigrants. The bill retains the excessively harsh and uncompromising immigration provisions of last year's vetoed bill. While we support the strengthening of requirements on the sponsors of legal immigrants applying for SSI, Food Stamps, and AFDC, the bill bans SSI and Food Stamps for virtually all legal immigrants, and imposes a five-year ban on all other Federal programs, including non-emergency Medicaid, for new legal immigrants. These bans would even cover legal immigrants who become disabled after entering the country, families with children, and current recipients. The bill would deny benefits to 0.3 million immigrant children and would affect many more children whose parents are denied assistance. The proposal unfairly shifts costs to States with high numbers of legal immigrants. In addition, the bill requires virtually all Federal, State, and local benefits programs to verify recipients' citizenship or alien status. These mandates would create significant administrative burdens for State, local, and non-profit service providers, and barriers to participation for citizens.

Medical Assistance Guarantee. Even after the proposed removal of the Medicaid reconciliation provisions from H.R. 3734, the Administration opposes provisions that do not guarantee continued Medicaid eligibility when States change AFDC rules. Specifically, we are concerned that families who reach the 5 year time limit or additional children born to families that are already receiving assistance could lose their Medicaid eligibility and would be unable to receive the health care services that they need.

Protection in Economic Downturn. Although the contingency fund is twice the size of that contained in the vetoed bill, it still does not allow for further expansions during poor economic conditions and periods of increased need. We are also concerned about provisions that reduce the match rate on contingency funds for states that access the fund for periods of less than one year.

State Maintenance of Effort. Under H.R. 3437, States could reduce the resources they provide to poor children. We are deeply concerned that the bill provides the proposed cash assistance block grant with transfer authority to the Social Services Block Grant(SSBG). Transfers to SSBG could lead States to substitute Federal dollars for State dollars in an array of State social services activities, potentially cutting the effective State maintenance of effort levels required for the cash block grant.

Resources for Work. Based on Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimates, H.R. 3734 would leave states with a $9 billion shortfall over six years in resources for work if they maintained their current level of cash assistance. Morever, the Economic and Educational Opportunity Committee increased this shortfall and cut State flexibility by raising the weekly number of hours that States must place recipients in work activities and increasing the participation rates. The Economic and Educational Opportunities amendments would also create a shortfall in child care funding. As CBO has noted, most states would probably accept block grant penalties rather than meet the bill's participation rates and truly refocus the system on work.

Vouchers. The bill actually reduces State flexibility by prohibiting States from using block grant funds to provide vouchers to children whose parents reach the time limit. H.R. 4 contained no such prohibition, and the NGA opposes it. We strongly urge the adoption of the voucher language that protects children similar to that in the Administration's bill and Castle-Tanner.

Worker Displacement. We are deeply concerned that the bill does not include adequate protections against worker displacement. Workers are not protected from partial displacement such as reduction in hours, wages, or benefits, and the bill does not establish any avenue for displaced employees to seek redress.

Family Caps. The House bill reverts back to the opt-out provision on family caps which would restrict State flexibility in this area. The Administration, as well as NGA, seeks complete State flexibility to set family cap policy.

EITC. The Administration opposes the provisions in H.R. 3734 that increase the EITC phase-out rates thereby raising taxes on more than four million low-income working families, with seven million children. In addition, the budget resolution instructs the revenue committees to cut up to $18.5 billion more from the EITC. Thus, EITC cuts could total over $2 billion, and such large increases on working families are particularly ill-conceived when considered in the context of real welfare reform—that is, encouraging work and making work pay.

We are also concerned that the bill repeals the Family Preservation and Support program, which may mean less State spending on abuse and neglect prevention activities.

We strongly support the bipartisan welfare reform initiatives from moderate Republicans and Democrats in both Houses of Congress. The Castle-Tanner proposal addresses many of our concerns, and it would strengthen State accountability efforts, welfare to work measures, and protections for children. It provides a foundation on which this Committee should build in order to provide more State flexibility, incentives for AFDC recipients to move from welfare to work; more parental responsibility; and protections for children. It is a good strong bill that would end welfare as we know it. Castle-Tanner provides the much needed opportunity for a real bipartisan compromise and should be the basis for a quick agreement between the parties.

The President stands ready to work with the Congress to address the outstanding concerns so that we can enact a strong bipartisan welfare reform bill to replace the current system with one that demands responsibility, strengthens families, protects children, and gives States broad flexibility and the needed resources to get the job done.

Sincerely,

JACOB J. LEW,
Acting Director.

Mr. FORD. As I have stated, my amendment makes the bill identical to H.R. 4. If we are serious about passing a welfare reform bill acceptable to both the Congress and the administration, why should we allow this bill to be even tougher on children than H.R. 4 which the President vetoed?

Mr. President, the American Public Welfare Association also supports this amendment. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of a June 26, 1996, letter from APWA be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN PUBLIC WELFARE ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, June 26, 1996.

DEAR SENATOR: As the Senate Finance Committee considers amendments to S. 1795, the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996, the American Public Welfare Association (APWA) urges your commitment to increased state flexibility in the design and implementation of welfare programs in light of the promising reform efforts underway in states throughout the country. Listed below are amendments that may be offered during the Committee's consideration of S. 1795. In accordance with the policies adopted by the APWA, we urge your support or opposition to the following amendments:

AMENDMENTS TO SUPPORT

Calculation of Work Participation Rate (Breaux): An amendment to count clients who leave welfare for work in the work participation rate calculation. States would be permitted to count their participation for the first 6 months they are engaged in at least 25 hours of work per week in a private sector job. APWA strongly supports this amendment to credit states with successfully moving welfare clients off welfare and into private sector employment.

Child Welfare Information Systems (Chafee/Rockefeller): An amendment to extend the enhanced match rate of 75% for federal fiscal year 1997 for the statewide automated child welfare information systems (SACWIS). APWA strongly supports continued funding for SACWIS systems which are critical to improving child welfare services.

Title XX Reductions (Rockefeller): An amendment to reduce the proposed 20 percent cut in the Social Services Block Grant (Title XX) to 10 percent. APWA urges the adoption of this amendment to reduce cuts in the Title XX Block Grant which states use to provide critical supportive work and family services.

AMENDMENTS TO SUPPORT

Contingency Fund (Breaux): An amendment to clarify the calculation of state maintenance of effort in the contingency fund. APWA strongly supports this clarification of qualified state expenditures for the purpose of calculating state maintenance of effort.

Contingency Fund (Breaux): An amendment to modify the contingency fund to provide that states which access contingency fund during only part of the year are not penalized. APWA strongly supports this amendment to ensure that states do not have their federal match rate for contingency funds reduced if these states only require funds for part of the year.

Child Welfare Services (Chafee): An amendment to retain current law that makes alien children, who do not qualify for AFDC, eligible for IV–E foster care and adoption assistance if they meet the other eligibility requirements. APWA policy supports current law for Title IV-E or its optional block grant proposal for this program. Consistent with this policy, APWA supports retaining this particular provision in current law that has been omitted in the bill.

Five Year Time Limit (Breaux): An amendment to provide states with the flexibility to use Temporary Assistance to Needy Family (TANF) block grant funds as in-kind assistance to children of families which have reached the 5 year lifetime time limit.

AMENDMENTS TO OPPOSE

Work Exemption (Conrad): An amendment to exempt single parents with children under age 11 who cannot find child care from the penalties for refusing to meet work requirements. APWA opposes this amendment because it would exempt single adults from work requirements, yet financially penalizes states for failure to meet the bills work participation rates.

Increased Hours of Work (Pressler): An amendment to increase hours of work required per week. APWA opposes this amendment because it fails to provide additional funds for the provision of child care services needed to meet increased hours of work.

AMENDMENTS TO OPPOSE

Decreased Job Search (Pressler): An amendment to decrease the number of weeks job search activities can count towards the work participation rate. APWA supports job search as a valid work activity that should count toward work participation.

Increase work participation rate (Pressler): An amendment to increase work participation rates contained in the bill. APWA opposes this amendment because it fails to provide additional funds for placement, child care and other supportive work services needed to meet increased work participation rates.

Work Participation Rate Penalties (Gramm): An amendment to impose an additional 5 percent penalty on states for consecutive failure to meet the work participation requirements. APWA opposes this amendment to increase penalties on states beyond those contained in the bill.

Work Participation Rate (Gramm): An amendment to limit to one year the exception to the work participation rate calculation for families with children under 1 year of age.

Exemption (Gramm): An amendment to allow states to exempt families with children under 1 year of age from the work requirement, but require that such exempt families count for purposes of determining the work participation rate. APWA opposes this amendment because it would exempt single adults from work requirements, yet financially penalizes states for failure to meet the bills work participation rates.

Work Requirement (Gramm): An amendment to increase the work requirement on families if they receive federally funded child care assistance by: 1) 10 additional hours a week for a single parents and b) 30 hours per week for the nonworking spouse in a two-parent family. APWA opposes this amendment because it fails to recognize the additional funds required for placement, child care and other supportive work services needed to meet increased work requirements.

Paternity Establishment (Gramm): An amendment to strengthen the requirements for paternity establishment as a condition for receiving benefits, with a state option to exempt as much as 25% of the population. APWA believes states should have the option to impose this requirement, but it should not be a mandate.

Hardship Exemption (Gramm): An amendment to limit the hardship exemption from the five year lifetime time limit to 15 percent from the 20 percent exemption in S. 1795. APWA supports the hardship exemption of at least 20 percent of the entire caseload.

Thank you for your consideration of these APWA positions. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me or Elaine Ryan at (202) 682-0100.

Sincerely,

A. SIDNEY JOHNSON III,
Executive Director.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, we can keep the restriction on cash assistance after 5 years, but let us not take a step backward and prohibit all forms of noncash assistance. This prohibition is aimed directly at our children, and I think it is misguided.

If we want a welfare reform compromise, if we want to avoid being unnecessarily harsh on our children, if we want to maximize State flexibility, we should pass this amendment. It is supported by the National Governors' Association, and it makes the bill identical to H.R. 4, which passed the Congress last year. It does not add to the cost of the bill and it promotes State flexibility.

During the conference last year, the Governors lobbied hard for this particular amendment. I know none of my colleagues take these decisions lightly, but I hope you will remember that each one of us will be forever wedded to these decisions. We are essentially providing a road map for the future, the futures of hundreds of thousands of children in this country. Make no mistake about it, 5 or 10 or 15 years from now, when these children have become young adults, you and I must take some responsibility for their successes or failures.

Of course, they will have their setbacks, just like you and me. But let us assure that those setbacks are not set in motion by the decisions we make today. By passing this amendment, I believe one day each of us can look at our future parents, doctors, lawyers, farmers and teachers, taking pride in our role to assure they grew up with a safe place to sleep at night, clothes on their backs, and food in their stomachs.

If we fail to pass this amendment, the children who become trapped in lives of mediocrity or fall through the cracks to obscurity will belong to us as well.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent a letter from my Governor in Kentucky, who is now part of the leadership of the National Governors' Association, supporting this amendment be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Frankfort, KY, July 18, 1996.

Hon. WENDELL FORD,
Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FORD: As the Senate begins its welfare debate this week, I understand you plan to offer an amendment that would allow states to use federal block grant funds to provide non-cash assistance to the children of welfare families, after a family has reached the proposed five-year lifetime limit on benefits. I am writing to offer my full support of that amendment.

Welfare has always been a federal-state partnership and responsibility. The federal government must continue to assist states' efforts to support children of welfare parents. To abandon these children after any amount of time is a horrible breach of this partnership and adds up to nothing but an over-burdensome unfunded mandate on the states. As a nation, we have committed ourselves to protecting the lives and well-being of the innocent. In this case, we are talking about the most innocent of all—our children.

Any welfare reform legislation must include provisions to move recipients to work. I support a tough and responsible approach that makes welfare recipients work and urges them to move off the program. However, any welfare reform must also continue to provide a safety net for those recipients' children. These children have no control over the direction of their young lives.

It is also conceivable that in a span of 20-30 years, a hard working family trying to carry their own weight in our society and provide for their families could fall on hard times during downturns in the economy. It would be particularly unfortunate to punish these families who are attempting to contribute to society but who from time to time need limited assistance.

Therefore, I fully support your amendment to insure the federal government does not shirk its responsibility to our children and lay an inappropriate fiscal burden on the states. You will find that other governors across the nation will also support this action. The National Governors' Association, in a June 26 letter to Congress, expressed its support for the content included in this amendment. Congress should defer to this bipartisan support from the nation's governors. After all, it is we governors who will be charged with implementing any national welfare reform program.

Thank you and please contact me if I can be of any further assistance on this matter.

Sincerely,

PAUL E. PATTON.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, the Catholic Bishops' Conference supports this amendment. I ask unanimous consent a letter from the Catholic Bishops' Conference in support of my amendment be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. CATHOLIC CONFERENCE,
Washington, DC, July 17, 1996.

DEAR SENATOR: The Catholic Bishops' Conference has long suggested genuine welfare reform that strengthens families, encourages productive work, and protects vulnerable children. We believe genuine welfare reform is an urgent national priority, but we oppose abandonment of the federal government's necessary role in helping families overcome poverty and meet their children's basic needs. Simply cutting resources and transferring responsibility is not genuine reform.

As Chairman of the Domestic Policy Committee of the United States Catholic Conference, I share the goals of reducing illegitimacy and dependency, promoting work and empowering families. However, I am writing to you to express our concern about provisions in S 1795, (Senate Budget Committee's Reconciliation report S 1956), which would result in more poverty, hunger and illness for poor children. As the Senate considers this bill, we strongly urge you to support amendments in five essential areas.

(1) FAMILY CAP

We urge the Senate to support efforts to remove the family cap which denies increased assistance for additional children born to mothers on welfare unless state law repeals it. See the attached briefing sheet on why the "opt out" is effectively a mandatory cap which the Senate rejected on a bipartisan basis 66–34. We urge the Senate again to reject this measure which will encourage abortions and hurt children.

We believe the so-called "opt-out" provision is, in reality, a federally mandated family cap because it can only be removed by the unprecedented and extreme requirement that both houses of a state legislative pass and the Governor sign a law repealing the federal mandate. The Bishops' Conference's opposition to the family cap is based on the belief that children should not be denied benefits because of their mothers' age or dependence on welfare. These provisions, whatever their intentions, are likely to encourage abortion, especially in those states which pay for abortions, but not for assistance to these children. These states say to a young woman, we will pay for your abortion, but we will not help you to raise your child in dignity.

New Jersey is the state with the most experience with a family cap. In May 1995, New Jersey welfare officials announced that the abortion rate among poor women increased 3.6% in the eight months after New Jersey barred additional payments to women on welfare who gave birth to additional children. This increase is exactly what pro-life opponents of the family cap predicted. A study conducted by Rutgers University also has shown that the New Jersey law barring additional payments to welfare mothers who have more children has not affected birthrates significantly among those women. The study refutes several earlier announcements that birth rates among New Jersey welfare mothers had dropped dramatically since the state implemented the policy in 1992. While state officials recently reported a drop in the birth rate among welfare mothers, officials are wary of linking this deline with imposition of the family cap.

Although these results are prelimary, the abortion increase coupled with the absence of an association between the family cap and birth rates suggest that the policy of denying children benefits doesn't do much to reduce illegitimate births except by increasing abortions.

On a related matter, we support efforts to assure that teen parents are offered the education, training and supervision necessary for them to become good parents and productive adults. We also believe that teen parents should be discouraged from setting up independent households and endorsed this approach in our own statement on welfare reform.

(2) NATIONAL SAFETY NET

We urge the Senate to permit states to provide vouchers or cash payments for the needs of children after the time limits have been reached. The Senate bill cuts off all assistance after two consecutive years on welfare and five years in a lifetime, regardless of the efforts of the family or the needs of children.

We support more creative and responsive federal-state-community partnership, but we cannot support destruction of the social safety net which will make it more difficult for poor children to grow into productive individuals. We cannot support reform that destroys the structures, ends entitlements, and eliminates resources that have provided an essential safety net for vulnerable children or permits states to reduce their commitment in these areas. Society has a responsibility to help meet the needs of those who cannot care for themselves especially young children. In the absence of cash benefits, vouchers would provide essential support for poor children.

(3) FOOD AND NUTRITION

We urge the Senate to remove the optional state block grant and reduce the cuts in food stamps. The Senate bill cuts more than $25 billion in food assistance to poor children and families, permits a state block grant of the federal food stamp program, and cuts single adults (18–50) from food stamps even if they have made every effort to find a job or a training slot.

We cannot support "reform" that eliminates resources that have provided an essential safety net for vulnerable families and children. Over half the cuts in this bill are in the Food Stamp program. These cuts will likely create an even greater burden on children and families when coupled with other changes called for in this bill. The optional food stamp block grant also troubles us. These fixed payments will make it difficult for states to respond to increased need in times of economic downturns.

(4) EARNED INCOME TAX CREDIT

We urge the Senate to reduce the cuts in the EITC. S 1795, as passed by the Finance Committee, includes $5 billion in EITC cuts, nearly 40% coming from the credit for low-income working families without significant assets. These reductions would affect nearly five million families with children.

We support real welfare reform which leads to productive work with wages and benefits that permit a family to live in dignity. Real jobs at decent wages, and tax policies like an effective Earned Income Tax Credit [EITC], can help keep families off welfare.

(4) LEGAL IMMIGRANTS

We urge the Senate to permit legal immigrants to receive essential benefits and at the very least to receive health care through Medicaid. The Senate bill denies assistance to all legal immigrants in "means-tested programs" (i.e., AFDC, Medicaid, Food Stamps). We urge the Senate to reject this unfair provision and, at least, substitute the less punitive restrictions contained in the recently passed Immigration bill (i.e., permit Medicaid assistance, etc.).

We cannot support punitive approaches that target immigrants, including legal residents, and take away the minimal benefits that they now receive. The provisions in the Immigration and Reform Act of 1995 [H.R. 2202] would at least leave fewer families and children without essential health care and cash supports, even though these provisions go beyond what the bishops would support.

In summary, we urge you to support genuine welfare reform, not this legislation which simply reduces resources and reallocates responsibilities without adequately protecting children and helping families overcome poverty. Without substantial changes, this legislation falls short of the criteria for welfare reform articulated by the nation's Roman Catholic bishops and we urge you to oppose it.

Sincerely,

Rev. WILLIAM S. SKYLSTAD,
Bishop of Spokane,
Chair, Domestic Policy Committee.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, the Catholic Conference of Kentucky has written a letter endorsing and supporting my amendment. I ask unanimous consent it be printed in the RECORD, also.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CATHOLIC CONFERENCE OF KENTUCKY,
Frankfort, KY, July 19, 1996.

Senator WENDELL FORD,
Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FORD: As you are well aware from previous correspondence with the Catholic Conference of Kentucky, the Bishops have major concerns about the welfare reform legislation which passed the House on Thursday. The United States Catholic Conference Office of Government Liaison has informed staff that the Senate is expected to take this up immediately. On behalf of the Bishops, I'd like to touch upon key issues with you.

The Family Cap, which your voting record has been perfect on, will prohibit states from using federal funds to provide cash assistance to children born to current welfare recipients. The "opt-out" provision is virtually a federal mandatory cap. We ask you to continue to support removing this prohibition on Kentucky's use of federal funds for Kentucky's children.

The Social Safety Net would no longer exist as this bill ends the guarantee of basic assistance to poor children and families. Please support any amendments which would allow Kentucky to meet their needs through continued support either as cash payments or vouchers when they reach the time limit.

The Food Stamp program would experience massive spending reductions. Please support any amendments to remove the optional food stamp block grant and ease the harshness of the provision which terminates food stamps to individuals, 18 to 50 years old, who cannot find work.

Legal immigrants would be denied benefits when, despite their contributions through work and taxes, they fall on hard times. Please support any amendments which would permit legal immigrants to receive benefits and, at the very least, to receive health care though Medicaid.

We know that the debate will be heated and the rhetoric will flow, but we know that Kentuckians can look to their Senior Senator for balance. Thanks so much for your consideration of these matters and for all that you do for us in Washington, D.C. Please do not hesitate to call if you have questions concerning any of this. See you at Fancy Farm!

Sincerely,

JANE J. CHILES.

Mr. FORD. So, Mr. President, I think this amendment moves us closer to compromise. I urge the adoption of my amendment. As I said earlier, this is one that ought to be accepted. The distinguished former Governor of New Hampshire, on the floor of the Senate last week said, as it related to the Breaux amendment, he did not like the first half, but the second half of the amendment he liked very much, which is basically the amendment I offered here today.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, as I understand it, nothing we are doing here today precludes us from raising a point of order on this amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. If one lies. We are not sure at this point. We are going to go see if it does.

Mr. FORD. If I may say to my friend, Mr. President, the point of order would lie against the Breaux amendment. But in talking with the Parliamentarian and others, this particular amendment would not have a point of order against it. I hope the Senator would not do that.

Mr. DOMENICI. We are not going to do that unless it lies. If it lies, we will do that.

Mr. FORD. Fine. Let us find out.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say, the arguments have been made more eloquently than I can make them. As I understand it, tomorrow, when this matter comes up for a vote, we will each have a minute to respond. I think I will not respond at this point other than to say clearly there are benefits beyond the cash assistance benefit that is being modified here. That program called AFDC, the cash assistance, we are trying to terminate that as a way of life after 5 years. That does not mean that other programs that assist people who are poor, including poor children, are terminated by this bill. So voucher-type programs in the housing area and others are still going to be available.

The question is, Do you want to break the cycle of dependency in this basic AFDC Program at 5 years, or do you want to break that and then start up another one? That is the issue. Do you want to start up a whole new bureaucracy of vouchers and the like, or do you want to break that dependency and get on with changing the very culture of the welfare system.

I think part of that is what this amendment addresses. We will have to decide as a Senate what we want to do about that.

I yield back any time I have in opposition to the amendment at this point. I assume the Senator is going to yield his back shortly, I say to my colleague?

Mr. FORD. Yes, I will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished Democratic whip is recognized.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, flexibility by the Governors of the various States, I think, is very important. Regarding the Governors who will be responsible for this, their association has asked they be allowed to do this without being cut off.

Last week they said this amendment would be unnecessary because States can already use title XX money, the social services block grant, to fund these vouchers. Social services block grant, title XX, is simply inadequate to meet those needs. Title XX has been funded at essentially the same level since 1991. There is a greater demand on these funds today than ever before.

Title XX funds are used to provide—now listen to this—title XX funds are used to provide aid to the homebound elderly. What the opponents of this amendment are saying to States is: Choose between your homebound elderly and your poorest children, but do not expect any State flexibility to use your welfare block grant. That is what they are saying.

I have never seen and heard people being against poor children as I have heard for the last several days. Everyone says to Governors, to whom we want to give flexibility and give this block grant to, that you cannot have flexibility with children. It just does not make sense. I have been a Governor. We have had hard times. My State is one of the States that has not asked for a waiver. Our welfare rolls are down 23 percent. It is because of the economy, basically. We still have about 14 or 15 counties that are in double-digit unemployment. They have problems.

What if we have an economic downturn? We are going to need all the flexibility in the States we can have. But we come here and listen, day after day after day: "There are other programs you can use. You can use title XX," the Republicans said last week. But that is aid to the homebound elderly. Are you going to force a Governor to make the decision between the homebound elderly and our poorest children? Do not expect any State flexibility to use your welfare block grant, Governor.

Title XX block grants are also used for preventing or remedying neglect, abuse, exploitation of children unable to protect their own interests, like preventing or reducing inappropriate institutional care by providing community-based or home-based care, or other alternatives. That is title XX.

Why not give the Governors and the States the flexibility they are asking for? All we are doing is just returning this bill to the same position as H.R. 4, in the last session, that most people on the other side voted for.

Now we say, "Oh, they've got other places." This bill allows States to exempt 20 percent of the welfare rolls, it does not count time spent on welfare as a minor—it allows all these things. But after 5 years, you are through. Period.

If you are going to give them the welfare block grant, they ought to have an opportunity. It is just beyond me, after you work your heart out to try to eliminate poverty in your State and your counties and your cities and you know what needs to be done, that we say up here, for sound bites—sound bites—we are going to give it back to the States, but we are going to tell the States how to do it. That does not make sense to a former Governor. It does not make sense. If you are going to put the responsibility on my back, if you are going to put the responsibility on a Governor somewhere, give him the ability to make decisions and not strip him of that ability, do not keep him in a box where he cannot reach out and help children.

That is all I am asking for, Mr. President, is the ability of a Governor to have flexibility to use the money that we send to him, and it will be shorter than it is this year. Do not kid yourself about title XX. It has not been increased in 5 years. It is the same amount of money, and we are growing—more people. The percentage of elderly is growing every year, but we are not sending any more money. It is the same amount. It has been level, it has been flat for 5 years, and they say, take it out of title XX, take it out of homebound elderly, and give it to the poorest of children? That is a heck of a choice to give to an individual who has the responsibility of leading his State.

So, Mr. President, I hope that my colleagues will join with me in saying to those Governors out there, "We're going to give you a very heavy load to carry, and that load is trying to work out welfare reform and make it work in your State." Let's not handcuff him or her. Let's give him or her the flexibility to do what is in the best interest, particularly for children.

I yield the floor.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back the remainder of my time.

I gather now, under previous arrangements, Senator ASHCROFT is going to offer an amendment. Mr. President, is the Senator ready?

Mr. ASHCROFT. Yes, I am.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. FORD. Will the Senator yield for 10 seconds? I apologize for this.

Mr. ASHCROFT. No problem at all.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator REID be added as a cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. I thank the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able Senator from Missouri is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 4941

(Purpose: To provide that a family may not receive TANF assistance for more than 24 consecutive months at a time unless an adult in the family is working or a State exempts an adult in the family from working for reasons of hardship, and that a family may not receive TANF assistance if the family includes an adult who fails to ensure that their minor dependent children attend school or such adult does not have, or is not working toward attaining, a high school diploma or its equivalent)

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. ASHCROFT] proposes an amendment numbered 4941.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike section 408(a)(8) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 2103(a)(1), and insert the following:

(8) NO ASSISTANCE FOR MORE THAN 5 YEARS; FOR FAILURE TO ENSURE MINOR DEPENDENT CHILDREN ARE IN SCHOOL; OR FOR FAILING TO HAVE OR WORK TOWARD A HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMA OR ITS EQUIVALENT.—

(B) MINOR CHILD EXCEPTION.—In determining the number of months for which an individual who is a parent or pregnant has received assistance under the State program funded under this part for purposes of subparagraph (A)(i), the State shall disregard any month for which such assistance was provided with respect to the individual and during which the individual was—

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Missouri, do we have a copy of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. ASHCROFT. The Senator will be pleased to send a copy of the amendment to the Senator from New Mexico.

The Senator from Missouri inquires, should we be operating under a time agreement here?

Mr. DOMENICI. We do not have to. I know of no other Senator prepared to offer an amendment. Take as much time as you like. You are entitled to an hour.

Mr. ASHCROFT. I am sure we will be able to accomplish what we need to accomplish in substantially less time.

Mr. President, thank you for this opportunity to offer an amendment. I believe that it is important for us in this Congress, and in the bill which is before the Senate, to change the character of welfare. That is the challenge which is before us. We have to change a system which has provided people with a condition—a condition of dependence, a condition of relying on others, a condition which has been a trap—and we need to change welfare from being a condition to being a transition.

The welfare situation should be a time when we prepare ourselves for the next step in our lives, when we prepare ourselves to be out of dependence and out of reliance on others, we prepare ourselves to be industrious, to be independent and reliant upon ourselves.

Welfare cannot be something that is a lifestyle. It has to be something that is just for a while. It has to be something that moves us forward. I believe there are fundamental components of this bill which will do that, but we can enhance them substantially in their capacity to change the character of welfare, to change it from a way of life, to change it to a way of escape, to change it from a lifestyle, to change it to being a transition, to change it from a condition to being a transition.

Mr. President, according to Senator MOYNIHAN, the average welfare recipient spends 12.98 years on the rolls. That is a substantial and monumental waste of human resource. We have individuals who are reliant, who are dependent, whose level of contribution and productivity in our culture is very, very, very low, and that 12 years is a teaching time as well as a time of existence.

Unfortunately, that 12 years becomes a time when young people are taught dependence instead of independence. They are taught reliance on Government instead of self-reliance.

One of the things we should ask ourselves about everything we do in Government is: What does it teach? What does it reinforce? What basic principles and values are advanced by it? And a welfare system that provides for 12.98 years as the average time a welfare recipient spends on the rolls—what about those that are on there longer? This is not teaching something that is valuable to our culture. We need to be reinforcing, providing incentives for support for a system that does not institute a condition for life, making a career of welfare, but energizes a transition for life, leaving welfare and going to work.

The 12.98 years is reflected in the fact that we have had soaring rates in the kind of social conditions that intensify the challenge and the condition of welfare—a 600-percent increase in illegitimacy over the last three decades. I think we can agree that the welfare system we now have is a miserable failure, but if we do not build into this system things to change the outcomes, we are going to end up with the same problems just being tougher and tougher to solve.

Industrialist friends of mine tell me that whatever system you have, you can be assured that it is perfectly designed to give you what you are getting, and if you do not like what you are getting, you need to change the system.

This welfare bill that we are debating today will shorten the time from 12.98 years down. It will limit most welfare recipients to a 5-year lifetime limit on temporary assistance to needy families.

The big challenge of the 12-year problem is, What kind of habits do you build in 12 years?

I suspect that if you involve yourself in a routine for 12 years, it is very difficult ever to break that routine. Sociologists tell us, if you want to lose weight—that is one of the things I want to do—they say you have to change your habits for about 6 or 7 weeks in order to have a new habit of diet, a new way to consume food. We are talking about changing habits that people have hardened for 12.98 years on average.

One of the problems I have is that we have said we are going to change this by shortening the time period to 5 years. Well, 5 years will build a habit which is so strong that it is almost impossible to break. I think we need to find a way to restructure the system so that everyone looks at that 5-year period as if it is an insurance policy and they do not want to take any more out of that bank of 5 years than they need to at the moment because there might come a time sometime later in life when they would have a desperate need for assistance. I believe that is what we need to do.

So we need to help people understand that there is 5 years. That is a lifetime limit. You should only draw from that savings account or reserve for emergencies what you desperately need and not use that 5 years as a way to create the habit of dependence which will be almost impossible for you to break.

But this bill would allow for most individuals 5 years—5 years—without work. Five years without work would build such a habit that I believe we would nearly disable the individuals, as we have with our current system.

I was stunned when I read in one of my home State papers last year that there was an experiment under a waiver granted by the Federal Government where they invited 140 welfare recipients to show up at a Tyson Foods plant. Only half of them showed up for work. They were invited to come in to look for a job. Of the half that showed up, only 39 accepted jobs. Of the 39 that accepted jobs, fewer than 30 were on the job a week after.

See, what we have done is we have built habits. We have established a condition for welfare. We do not have welfare as a transition, as a place of movement; it has become a place of repose. I believe we need to change that. For us to say that, even under this bill, which is a significant reform, for us to say that we would allow people to have 5 straight years without work, where your self-esteem or your skills, your motivation would atrophy, would wither—if you do not use a muscle for 5 weeks, it gets weak. If you do not use it for 5 months, it almost disappears. If you do not use it for 5 years, it is gone.

We have here the most important muscle in human character—self-esteem, skills, motivations. We are still providing in this bill that for as long as 5 years you can simply be there not working. The bill, as it stands, requires 15 percent of the unexempted population to work in the first year period, and 25 percent in the second year period—25 percent. That is one out of four. So for three out of four, they could go right by the first 2-year period and not even be involved in work.

I believe, though, as a result of this, that welfare recipients, other than that 25 percent who actually went to work, could just choose to coast along for the full 5 years of benefits with no additional incentive to get a job. I think that is where this bill needs correction. It needs dramatic correction.

I propose to amend this welfare bill to allow welfare recipients, able-bodied welfare recipients without infant children, to collect only 24 months of consecutive temporary assistance-to-needy-families benefits. At the end of those 2 years, if the recipient still refuses to work, I say, cut the benefit. What this really does is not result in cut benefits; this results in more people being willing to work.

Instead of saying to an individual who gets on welfare, if you work the system, you can last for 5 years, create the habits of reliance, create the habits of repose, reject the habits of industry and work; this would basically say, you better get to work, learning to get a job right away, because after 2 years, in spite of the fact that there is a 5-year lifetime limit, there is a 24-month consecutive receipt-of-benefit limit for able-bodied adults without infant children.

If a welfare recipient then decides not to work in the 2-year time span, the payment would cease. By doing this, we simply hope to inject a concept which is too novel which ought to be commonplace. That is the concept that work is beneficial and that it pays better and is better than welfare. Otherwise, we are simply going to be tempting people to stay on and approximate, or approach at least, as much as they can of the 12.98 years of time on welfare, which is now a debilitating and disabling influence in the American culture for too many Americans.

Our intention is to leave the time period between any times you consume your 24 consecutive months total up to the States, so that recipients could not leave the welfare rolls and sign up again a week later. I think States could make these judgments about what kind of interval that would be needed between the 24-month periods. Our central point, our responsibility here, is to say that we want to provide as part of the structure of our reform the energy to change, legislation that changes welfare from being a lifestyle to being a transition. We want to start to energize a commitment on the part of recipients to make the changes in the way they live so that they avoid prolonged exposures to the welfare system and find themselves at an earlier time being capable of sustaining themselves.

We want welfare recipients to look at this 5-year period as a lifetime cushion, not to be consumed in the first need or the second need, hopefully never to be consumed. Our objective should be that no one ever bumps the 5-year limit. Our objective should be that we energize people to go to work so quickly and so enthusiastically that they maintain their reserve to the day they die.

Permitting able-bodied welfare recipients to remain on assistance for a straight 5-year-long block of time simply would reinforce, reteach, perpetuate, and underscore the current cycle of dependence. We need to stop this cycle of dependence, not just for individuals, but for what it teaches to our children. Welfare has become an intergenerational phenomenon, where people are on so long that their children grow up knowing only one lifestyle—it is welfare. By limiting the uninterrupted block of time that welfare recipients remain on the rolls, we will reduce the level of dependence on government assistance.

Welfare can be habit forming, and has been habit forming. It can be addictive. It can be destructive, and it has been. We need to take the structural components of the welfare system, which are dehumanizing, demeaning and disabling, out of the system. We need to energize each individual to view welfare as transitional. We should do that by saying there can be no more than 24 consecutive months on welfare for any able-bodied individual without infant children, unless they will work.

I just indicate that on Tuesday of this last week President Clinton ordered that in case we do not pass welfare reform in the next few months, the Department of Health and Human Services will give States the power to cut off benefits if an able-bodied adult refuses to work after 2 years. This is not a Draconian message. This is a message and this is a concept called for by the President of the United States.

For us to deliver a welfare system back to the American people which reinforces, underlines, and strengthens the bad habit of long-term dependency would not only be an affront to the American people, but it would be our failure to respond to a President who has asked us to do much better. There is something much better that we should be doing, and something we can do. If we want to break the long-term aspects, the intergenerational aspects of welfare, we have to be a part of this teaching idea in a real way.

When I was Governor of the State of Missouri and I had the great privilege of serving the people of my State, we came to Washington to ask for a waiver, a waiver from the regulations of the Federal Government. The waiver was simply this: We said, please give Missouri the right to say to welfare recipients, if you do not make sure your kids are in school, you will not get your full benefit. It was a way of saying welfare is not a place where you can throw responsibility to the wind. It was a way of saying, if you are a parent, you have to be responsible for at least some fundamental basic things, like getting your kids to school, because we do not want your kids to stay at home and learn welfare, we want your kids to go to school and learn how to be productive. We were able to get that waiver. The program was called People Attaining Self-Sufficiency, PASS. PASS had some reference to school. We wanted kids to pass in school by having good attendance.

I think there is another part of the structure of welfare reform that we should embrace as we send the bill to the President of the United States. We should not have to have States coming to Washington, waiting 2 or 3 years, filling out enough paperwork to choke a horse in order to have the privilege of saying to people, "We expect you to make sure your kids are in school or we are not going to make sure your check is in the mail." It is that simple. It is very fundamental. If you are on welfare, your kids should be in school, because it is especially important to break the intergenerational chain of dependence. Part of this measure is to make sure we say to the individuals, "You have some responsibility."

Another important concept of this amendment is that it would allow States to require temporary assistance to needy families and food stamp recipients to either have a high school education or work toward attaining a high school education. It is my judgment that it is not very realistic to say to people, "We are sending you to work, but you do not have to have the kind of fundamental and basic skills that come from education." I am not talking about worker training here, I am talking about education. I am talking about the fact that an educated person can read the manual and train himself or herself. I am talking about the fundamental responsibility of culture, not the responsibility of a business to train people to do its business. I am talking about the fundamental responsibility of a culture to train its citizens by way of education.

Education is different, really, from training. Education is the basis upon which training builds. A person who cannot read or write will have a hard time, no matter how much training she gets. I believe if a person is going to be receiving this assistance that we need to say to them, "You are going to have to invest in yourself to the extent of having a high school education or a general equivalency diploma. The truth of the matter is you have a responsibility, and you have to be prepared to meet that responsibility."

As a matter of fact, this is a far more important thing than it has ever been before, because once we put a time limit on these matters, we need to energize people to be ready in order to fend for themselves when the time limit has expired. I hope we will have a 2-year time length on consecutive months of benefits, 24 months, and I believe in a 5-year lifetime benefit, as well. With that in mind we will have to make sure that people can fend for themselves at the expiration of that time.

Mr. President, I reserve the balance of my time, but I am happy to yield back my time on the amendment when all time is ready to be yielded back.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I see the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee on the floor; is he seeking recognition?

Mr. DOMENICI. I wondered who on the Democratic side was going to oppose this amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I was going to make a general statement. I will be introducing an amendment later. I was going to be making a short but general statement, if there is no objection to that.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I ask staff, perhaps they could confer with Senator LEAHY.

Is there somebody on your side that wants to respond to this amendment?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I say to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, I came to the floor because there was not anybody on the floor at this moment. I notice there that have been some quorum calls. I thought rather than hold up anything later on, as I would take probably less time than it would take now in discussing this, if I could just make a couple of comments about the nutrition aspects of the reconciliation bill.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have no objection if the distinguished Senator from Missouri has no objection to temporarily setting this aside while the Senator from Vermont proceeds.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to speak just briefly on matters involving nutrition aspects of the reconciliation bill. I will, later on, have amendments in that regard. It seems like this was a good time to speak.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, we need not set anything aside, but give him unanimous consent to proceed on a matter not related to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCAIN). The unanimous-consent request by the Senator from New Mexico is agreed to, and the Senator from Vermont is recognized to speak.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank my distinguished friend from New Mexico, the distinguished Presiding Officer from Arizona, and the distinguished Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, my message today is very simple—my concern is that the nutrition cuts in the reconciliation bill are going to make children go hungry if they are allowed to stay as they are.

At the beginning of this Congress, I attacked some of those people with the Contract With America crowd because they wanted to repeal the School Lunch Act, at that time in the name of balancing the budget. I also attacked them because they wanted to repeal the school breakfast program and then they wanted to repeal the summer food service program. I am not sure why they did that, but it was interesting to see how the American public reacted. They reacted with outrage.

Now I am afraid that the same American public is being fooled, because these nutrition cuts are now being made in a reconciliation bill. The same nutrition cuts that could not be made frontally are going to be made indirectly in the reconciliation bill.

It appears to me that the Contract With America crowd has totally abandoned its effort to balance the budget. Now they will settle for just taking food from children. The amendment to strike Medicaid without an offset means that senior citizens vote, but it shows they understand that children do not vote. If children could vote, there is no doubt in my mind these nutrition cuts would not be in this bill. In fact, if children could vote, the nutrition cuts that cut the school lunch, school breakfast, and summer reading programs would not even be attempted.

Nationwide, the nutrition cuts will take the equivalent of 20 billion meals from low-income families over the next 6 years. Children do not have political PAC's. Children do not vote. But now we find out what happens, children are the ones that will be hurt by these cuts.

If these cuts had something to do with balancing the budget, or were part of a larger effort to balance the budget, that would at least provide some justification. These programs that the Republican majority propose in child care food programs, these cuts hurt preschool-age children in day care homes in my home State of Vermont and in the rest of the Nation. Families with children will absorb at least 70 percent of the food stamp reductions. The impact on Vermont will be significant. The average food stamp benefit will drop to 65 cents per person per meal. Defy anybody to eat at 65 cents per meal. I think parents will have a very difficult time feeding hungry children on a 65-cent budget. I remember my three children when they were going up could eat you out of house and home. They certainly could not be fed on 65 cents a meal.

Most of these food stamp cuts are done cleverly. There is $23 billion that comes from provisions that alter the mathematical factors and formula used in computer software, so nobody sees or figures it out. But the end result is there are lower benefits for children.

Children will go hungry because new computer programs are used. These hungry children will not even know they have been reformed; neither will their parents. All they will know is they are going to be a lot, lot hungrier once the computers turn on.

Over 95 percent of the cuts in nutrition programs are unrelated to welfare reform. Most cuts are simply implemented by computer software. I do not know how that represents reform—unless somebody feels that a computer can think and feed and knows hunger, and a computer can recognize hungry children.

In fact, in a couple of years, hunger among Vermont children will dramatically increase under this bill. As it is now written in the nutrition areas, it is antifamily, antichild, it is mean-spirited, and it is really beneath what a great country should stand for. It takes food from children, and it does virtually nothing to reform or improve nutrition programs. In fact, it is not even an attempt to balance the budget, so we can at least say we are doing that for the children in future years.

A lot of talk was made last year about the Contract With America and about how the budget will be balanced with real cuts. I said at that time that I did not think the people who were "talking that talk" would "walk the walk" by making the real cuts. I was right.

That net result of this Congress will be that the Agriculture Committee baseline is greatly reduced, and that other committees will get away without contributing a penny, let alone their fair share, toward balancing the budget. But what that means is, when it works its way down, it works its way down to children. Why? As I said before, children do not vote, children do not contribute to PAC's, children do not hire lobbyists, children do not get involved in campaigns. So children will go hungry. It is as simple as that. Everybody else gets protected.

The distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee was on the floor here a minute ago. I remember when he came before the Agriculture Committee in 1990. He called the Food Stamp Program "the backbone of our way of helping the needy in this country." I agreed with Senator DOMENICI when he said that. But now that backbone is being broken in this bill. In a couple of years, there will be a stream of news stories about hungry children standing in lines at soup kitchens, because over 80 percent of food stamp benefits go to families with children.

Let us not have a bill that punishes children because they cannot vote. Let us do what the distinguished Senator from New Mexico said in 1990. Let us remember our children. Let us remember the Food Stamp Program, which, as he said so eloquently, "is the backbone of our way of helping the needy in this country."

So, Mr. President, I will have amendments later on to improve this, unless improvements are made before that time. I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand that the Democratic side will have no one responding to the Senator from Missouri. If the Senator finishes, he can yield back the remainder of his time, and we will ask that they yield back any time they have, and the Senator's amendment will be final, unless the point of order lies, and the Senator will have time tomorrow to explain it.

I appreciate the comments of the distinguished Senator from Vermont. I say, however, that statements I made with reference to food stamps should not mean that the Senator from New Mexico does not think that, from time to time, we must look at the program, because it is frequently abused and abused in many ways. We have lent ourselves to some of that abuse by the way we have written the law.

I know we are setting about in this bill to reform food stamps and make sure that it is less fraudulently used. But I wanted to make sure that my entire thoughts about it, as I went before the committee in 1990, are at least here in principle in the RECORD today.

Mr. LEAHY. If the Senator will yield on that point, would the Senator from New Mexico agree with me that the Food Stamp Program, properly used, can be of extreme benefit to low-income children.

Mr. DOMENICI. There is no question about it. We do not have a better program——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I admonish both Senators to observe the rules of the Senate. You must address each other through the Chair.

Mr. LEAHY. I believe I had, Mr. President. I believe I asked if the Senator would yield so I might ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Chair did not rule. Without objection, the Senator from Vermont is recognized to ask a question of the Senator from New Mexico.

I think the Senator from Vermont knows the rules.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I repeat my question to the Senator from New Mexico. Would he not agree that the food stamp proposal, properly used, is extremely helpful in feeding low-income children in this country?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I was going to respond to the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Certainly, I agree. I do not know that we have found a better way, yet, even with all of its faults, to get nutrition into the hands of the poor. I repeat that, however, I think the Senator from Vermont knows that no matter how good it is, it is frequently abused. We sometimes "right it" in ways that make it subject to being abused more so. I only wanted to make that comment. I agree that we have not yet found a better way. Cash benefits do not seem to work as well because, indeed, they are not used for nutritional items. If we keep a tight grasp on making sure they are not fraudulently traded and they are used for nutrition, we do not have anything better yet that I am aware of.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, my point is that we have seen some great changes in the Food Stamp Program, some very significant improvements, over the years. We have seen other improvements that we wait to come forth, like the use of electronic benefit transfer.

I have been very proud to work very closely with the now chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee and, before that, the ranking member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, the senior Senator from Indiana, in making these improvements. They have saved a lot of money. I also point out that the Food Stamp Program is extremely important.

During the last administration, 40,000 to 45,000 people were added every single week in the 4 years President Bush was President—40,000 to 45,000 every single week for 4 years were added. That is, in over 200 weeks they were added to the food stamp rolls.

Let me just remind my friend from New Mexico and others about this. When we talk about whether this program is utilized in a Republican or Democratic administration, it is a program for everybody. During the Bush administration, every single week, because of the way the economy was, 40,000 people were added, at the taxpayers' expense, to the food stamp rolls.

We have been fortunate with the efforts to balance the budget and improve the economy, and since President Clinton came in, 2 million people have been able to drop from the food stamp rolls, as compared to 40,000 people a week being added in the 200 weeks during the past administration. Two million people have now been taken off in this administration. That is good news for the economy and good news for the taxpayers. But it also points out that in both Democratic and Republican administrations, we should be protecting the Food Stamp Program.

Reform it? Yes. My point is, of course, that a computer program that simply cuts children off without reform is not reform. We should be willing to stand up as legislators and make the tough decisions on how to reform the Food Stamp Program, and not simply say to a computer program: Here, you do it. We cannot totally cut off children because they do not vote, they do not contribute, and they are not part of the political process. They will never complain.

We will not touch anything in areas of senior citizens, or anybody else, because they do vote and they do complain. By golly, those children—tough. Go hungry.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD). Who seeks recognition?

Mr. ASHCROFT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Thank you, Mr. President. I will make a few remarks about the amendment which I proposed.

I want to reinforce again the concept that we need to change the character of welfare. We need to change welfare from being a condition in which people exist to being a transition from dependency—not only from dependency but long-term dependency—to independence, to work, to growth, and to opportunity. If we are going to do that, we should not acquiesce to a 5-year limit which allows people to go onto welfare and just get on it and stay for 5 years without doing anything. We should require of individuals—or at least provide that States require of individuals—that a number of things be done.

One, we should say no longer can you stay on welfare for more than 24 months in any one stretch without going to work or preparing for work by taking work training and getting an education.

Second, we should say never can you stay on welfare if you do not fulfill your responsibility to send your kids to school. If you are going to be on welfare, your kids ought to be in school. Children who are in school are less of a burden to individuals on welfare than children who are allowed to stay home or otherwise avoid their responsibility.

Third, if we expect people eventually to become self-reliant in their own setting, we are going to have to ask those individuals to have fundamental educational qualifications as well. In my judgment, that is the reason we ought to allow States to require that individuals who are seeking to continue to receive welfare benefits either have or be in the process of attaining the kind of educational qualifications that would come with a high school diploma or a GED.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all time be yielded back on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ASHCROFT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

AMENDMENT NO. 4942 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4941

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I send my amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. ASHCROFT] proposes an amendment numbered 4942 to amendment No. 4941.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. ASHCROFT. I ask unanimous consent that all time be yielded back on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4943 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4941

(Purpose: To provide that a state may sanction a family's TANF assistance if the family includes an adult who fails to ensure that their minor dependent children attend school)

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. ASHCROFT] proposes an amendment numbered 4943 to amendment No. 4941.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. DOMENICI. I object. I do not know what the amendment is.

Mr. President, I no longer have an objection, if he would renew his request. I understand what he is doing now. I did not understand. I do now.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In the language proposed to be inserted by the amendment, strike all after the first word and insert the following:

SANCTION WELFARE RECIPIENTS FOR FAILING TO ENSURE THAT MINOR DEPENDENT CHILDREN ATTEND SCHOOL.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A State to which a grant is made under section 403 shall not be prohibited from sanctioning a family that includes an adult who has received assistance under any State program funded under this part attributable to funds provided by the Federal Government or under the food stamp program, as defined in section 3(h) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977, if such adult fails to ensure that the minor dependent children of such adult attend school as required by the law of the State in which the minor children reside.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, without the Senator losing his right to the floor, might I ask unanimous consent to have the privilege of the floor to ask a question of the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Is it the purpose of the amendment—it is perfectly legitimate and proper—to make sure that there is no second-degree amendment offered to the Senator's amendment?

Mr. ASHCROFT. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I believe I have authority from the other side. If the Senator wants to propose a unanimous consent request that there be no second-degree amendment, it would be granted. Does the Senator prefer not to do that?

Mr. ASHCROFT. Yes. I would prefer to have the amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 4944 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4941

(Purpose: To provide that a state may sanction a family's TANF assistance if the family includes an adult who does not have, or is not working toward attaining, a secondary school diploma or its recognized equivalent)

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. ASHCROFT] proposes an amendment numbered 4944 to amendment No. 4941.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In the language proposed to be stricken by the amendment, strike all after the first word and insert the following:

REQUIREMENT FOR HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMA OR EQUIVALENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A State to which a grant is made under section 403 shall not be prohibited from sanctioning a family that includes an adult who is older than age 20 and younger than age 51 and who has received assistance under any State program funded under this part attributable to funds provided by the Federal Government or under the food stamp program, as defined in section 3(h) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977, if such adult does not have, or is not working toward attaining, a secondary school diploma or its recognized equivalent unless such adult has been determined in the judgment of medical, psychiatric, or other appropriate professionals to lack the requisite capacity to complete successfully a course of study that would lead to a secondary school diploma or its recognized equivalent.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, there are three basic thrusts that are undertaken in these amendments. They are the conversion of a system from being a system of conditioning people to be dependent to transitioning people to be at work.

The first thrust is that we would have a 24-consecutive-month limit on welfare for those who refuse to work or get training at the end of the 24 months. It seems to me that is something that the President of the United States called for last week and which we ought to have.

The second component of this strategy is to say that those who are on welfare should have their children in school. It is not something that is unknown or mysterious. The fact of the matter is that high school dropouts average $12,809 a year, a poverty-level standard of living for a family of three. For an individual who has a high school degree, the average is $18,737, a 46-percent higher income than the average for dropouts.

Half of those arrested for drug violations in 1995 did not have a high school diploma. And the preponderance of all crimes, 40 percent of all crimes, were committed by those who did not finish high school. It is time for us to ask those who are involved in the welfare system by way of receiving benefits under temporary assistance to needy families to make sure that their children are in school.

A high school degree is a key to escaping from the welfare trap. Statistics show that it keeps kids out of jail. Every parent has a principal and primary responsibility to make sure their children receive the kinds of fundamentals that will allow them to fend for themselves. Every child can attend school in America. Every child can earn a high school diploma. It costs nothing but commitment and responsibility. Too often this opportunity is ignored—even trashed. Teens drop out of school, grade school, or skip classes. This is a tragic waste of a precious resource, one on which our culture must rely.

All of our Government institutions should do everything possible to ensure that children go to school and earn a degree. Government should certainly not be paying parents to let their kids play hooky and skip school. If you are on welfare, your kids should be in school. Parents should not be co-conspirators in perpetuating their children in a lifetime on and off of welfare, in and out of minimum-wage jobs, and irresponsibility. Children must go to school in order to break the cycle of dependency, to change welfare from being a long-term condition into being a transition.

The amendment that I propose allows States—I repeat, allows States—to sanction welfare recipients of the temporary assistance to needy families that do not ensure that their children are attending school. It also allows States to sanction food stamp recipients who do not send their children to school. Children who graduate from a welfare system should be armed with a degree rather than with a habit of dependence. It is the key to self-reliance and success.

We have watched, as the Nation has watched, the Olympics. We need our full team on the field whenever we play. Even "The Dream Team" would have a tough time if they did not have the entire capacity of the team available as a resource. And yet we allow our citizens sometimes to ask for our help and to persist in receiving it without equipping themselves, without making a commitment to themselves. The last component of my amendments is really a way of saying if you are going to be on welfare, you have to have or be working toward a high school diploma so you can work for yourself and help yourself.

It is no mystery. States may require that temporary assistance to needy families and food stamp recipients work toward attaining a high school diploma or its equivalent as a condition of receiving welfare assistance. This requirement would not apply if an individual was determined in the judgment of medical, psychiatric, or other appropriate professionals to lack the requisite capacity to attain a high school diploma or GED.

During the debate this year in the Senate, Senator SIMON once said, "We can have all the job training in the world, but if we do not face the problem of basic education, we are not going to do what we ought to do for this country."

I cannot agree more with that statement. It does not pay us to provide job training upon job training upon job training when welfare recipients have not achieved proficiency in the fundamental underlying skills of mathematics, English, and reading which provide people with the tools to benefit from job training and to assimilate changes in the job market. We do not have jobs and crafts that do not change. They all have new processes and new procedures. As technology marches on, it is important to make sure that individuals cannot only get the right kind of job training but they possess the fundamental characteristic of being educated in order to be able to take advantage of job training when it comes along.

A person over 18 without a high school diploma averages $12,800 in earnings; with a high school diploma, $18,700 in earnings. A $6,000 difference is the difference between dependence and independence, the difference between self-reliance and reliance on Government. The U.S. Sentencing Commission determined that 40 percent of the individuals who commit crimes are individuals without high school diplomas. The Commission also found that these individuals are responsible for 50 percent of all drug violations. If people are going to receive welfare benefits, they should at least be working toward the fundamental equipping, enabling, freeing achievement of having a high school education.

Mr. President, I would be pleased together with the opponents of this amendment on the other side of the aisle to yield back the remainder of the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has yielded back the remainder——

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I need somebody from the other side of the aisle to yield back their time or we cannot proceed with any other amendments.

Mr. CONRAD. We are willing to yield back the time on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, pursuant to the previous understanding, I believe the distinguished Senator is entitled to offer his amendment at this point.

AMENDMENT NO. 4945

(Purpose: To expand State flexibility in order to encourage food stamp recipients to look for work and to prevent hardship)

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I would call up my amendment that is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD], for himself and Mr. LEAHY, proposes an amendment numbered 4945.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 6, strike lines 14 through 16 and insert the following:

Section 5(d)(7) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2014(d)(7)) is amended by striking "21 years of age or younger" and inserting "19 years of age or younger (17 years of age or younger in fiscal year 2002)".

On page 21, line 3, strike "$5,100" and insert "$4,650".

On page 49, line 3, strike "10" and insert "20".

On page 49, line 12, strike "1 month" and insert "2 months".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Chair.

I am joined in this amendment by my colleague from Vermont, Senator LEAHY, the ranking member of the Senate Agriculture Committee. This amendment addresses a serious problem with the food stamp provisions of the welfare bill that is before us now.

As I describe our amendment, I would like to bring my colleagues' attention to the chart beside me and the number 600,000 because that is the impact of the food stamp provisions before us; 600,000 Americans will lose eligibility each month under the provision that is in the bill before us.

The 600,000 estimated by the Congressional Budget Office is to be the number of people who would be terminated from the Food Stamp Program in any given month because they are unable to find a job within the 4-month time limit provided for in this legislation. Our amendment insists on work, and that is as it should be. But it promotes State flexibility by giving States an option to assist people who would otherwise be at risk of going hungry. Our amendment achieves these goals in two ways. First, the amendment would expand the State option to exercise a hardship exemption. The amendment increases the hardship exemption from 10 percent to 20 percent of the eligible population and makes it consistent with the AFDC block grant.

Simply stated, we are allowing States, instead of being able to declare 10 percent of their eligible population hardship cases not bound by the 4-month limit, to increase that at State option to 20 percent.

Second, the amendment allows States to count job search as work for 2 months instead of the 1 month provided in the bill before us. I want to be clear to my colleagues that the cost of this amendment is fully offset over the 6-year budget period. The Agriculture Committee will still be in full compliance with its budget reconciliation target.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONRAD. I would be happy to yield to my colleague if we do not have an interruption.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to use my time.

Mr. President, in behalf of the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee, I understand the amendment offered by Senator CONRAD allows States to exempt up to 20 percent of the able-bodied 18 to 50-year-olds from the work requirement and allow up to 2 months of job search per year to count as work.

Mr. CONRAD. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I believe the Food Stamp Program should have a strong work requirement as the Senator has indicated. I am now speaking in behalf of the chairman of the Agriculture Committee. Senator LUGAR understands the Senator's concern about the individuals who are willing to work may be unable to find a job due to circumstances beyond their control. Senator LUGAR continues on that in behalf of the Agriculture Committee, he finds the offsets acceptable and the amendment acceptable.

So at this point I want the Senator to know I am going to yield back all the time we have in opposition and indicate for the RECORD we are willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. CONRAD. I appreciate that from the able manager of the bill. I will just proceed briefly to outline the rationale for the amendment and then yield back our time as well.

Mr. President, everybody here agrees that work is important and that food stamp benefits should be temporary. But the work requirement provision in the pending welfare bill would have the unintended effect of preventing people who want to find work from securing a job. How can my colleagues seriously argue that people can be expected to find a job, to sit through an interview when they have not eaten? It does not work. I understand and support the work ethic in America, but I also believe our society has achieved a level of decency where we will not deny food assistance to people who have been unable to find a job in just 4 months.

The reason I felt it was important to offer this amendment is I have dealt with people who are in this exact circumstance. I remember very well a young fellow who worked construction in my State—very frankly, not the smartest guy in the world, and he had a hard time finding work, but he was able to work construction. He was a strong kid and he was able to work in that way. But the construction season in my state is not very long. You are lucky if you can be in construction 6 months out of the year in North Dakota some years.

This young fellow would work during the construction season, which usually starts in April in North Dakota, but come winter, November, the construction season ended. He was not able to find additional work. And I tell you, he came from a family that had next to nothing. He had next to nothing, lived in a very modest basement apartment, and that fellow needed some help during the winter to eat. That is just the reality of the circumstance.

Under this legislation, after 4 months, that guy would not get any help. Is that really what we want to do in America? Is that really what we want to do? We want to say to somebody, if you cannot find a job in 4 months, you do not get any food assistance? Is that what we have come to in this country? I find that hard to believe.

I really must say to my colleagues, if that is where we are, then something is radically wrong in this country. America is better than that. We are a wealthy nation, with a rich and abundant food supply. We should not knowingly adopt a national policy which promotes hunger. Certainly we should promote work, but not cut people off from food if they have not been able to find a job in 4 months. This amendment gives States the option to provide food for people who are unable to find a job within 4 months, at least 20 percent they can exempt as hardship cases, and they can count 2 months of looking for work as part of work.

As I already mentioned and as the chart serves to remind us, in addition to the number of people cut off the Food Stamp Program because of the tightened eligibility requirements and work registration requirements, the Congressional Budget Office has estimated the welfare bill before us will cut 600,000 people off of food stamps each month because they cannot find a job within the 4-month time limit. These 600,000 people will then be at risk of going hungry, more worried about finding their next meal than finding a job.

I cannot believe that is what we are about here in the U.S. Senate. According to a study done in 1993, 83 percent of the people who would be affected by this draconian provision are below 50 percent of the poverty line. We are talking about folks who do not have anything. Now we are going to say to them, "If you do not get a job within 4 months, you do not get to eat"? I cannot believe we are going to do that.

I am all for strong work requirements. I introduced my own welfare reform bill that had the toughest work requirements of any bill before us. But this is not a work provision. This is a hunger provision. We are talking about food for people who cannot find a job. I think it is entirely reasonable to give States the option to continue food stamp coverage for an additional month of intensive job search, to help make sure that poor people complete the transition from welfare to work.

The Senate-passed welfare reform bill that was supported by 87 Senators contained 6 months of food stamp eligibility for people in this category. Bipartisan efforts to reform the welfare system, including the Chafee-Breaux approach and the Specter-Biden proposal, also contained a 6-month food stamp time limit. These are far more humane and realistic provisions.

Mr. President, for those who think the majority of people affected by this provision are just scamming the system and are not interested in working, let me put this in perspective by translating it into dollar terms. Under the Food Stamp Program, the maximum level of benefits for a single person is $119 a month. That is about $4 a day. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that every one of the 600,000 who cannot find a job would accept job training or a work slot if one was available through the Food Stamp Employment Training Program. These 600,000 people are, consequently, receiving less than $4 a day in food stamps.

I ask my colleagues to think seriously about what this means, less than $4 a day in food stamps. Does it not make sense if there were actually minimum wage jobs available for $4.25 an hour that individuals would work at these jobs? Why would anyone trade a $4.25-an-hour job for $4 a day in food stamps? I do not think the vast majority of people would make that kind of trade. Clearly, we are talking about circumstances in which those jobs are not available. People cannot find those jobs. This is not a case of they are better off taking welfare than taking a job for $4 in food assistance. You would be much better off, clearly, with $4 an hour in a job.

Before I close, I want to spend just a minute talking about the hardship exemption. Again, I share the view of those who believe we must set limits and push people from welfare to work. But I think it is important to recognize there are people who just do not have the skills to find a job, or else have some personal hardship that means they will not be employed after 4 months on food stamps. Every one of us know people who, frankly, are marginal in the employment arena. They cannot find work. They are not educated, they are not trained, they may have one or more disabilities.

It is important, I think, also, to consider the devastating effects of natural disasters or economic downturn on a particular area, which may make it difficult for people to find employment in 4 months. If you have a natural disaster like a hurricane, tornado, earthquake, or a series of disasters as we have seen in California, all of a sudden an area may not have much in the way of employment. People may not be able to find a job.

I think it is also important for us to understand this issue affects urban areas and could cause increased tensions in some of America's biggest cities. A recent study showed that for every McDonald's opening in New York City, there were 14 applicants. They wanted to work, wanted to have a job. For whatever reason, they were not able to find a job. That circumstance has improved because the national economy has improved, but we all know the economy is subjected to cycles. Sometimes it is good and strong and sometimes it is not so good, not so strong.

What are we going to say to people who cannot find a job after 4 months? We are going to deny them food stamps? What are we telling them? Telling them to go to the garbage can to find something to eat?

I have people right now going through my neighborhood who are looking in garbage cans trying to find something to eat, and my neighborhood in this town is eight blocks from where we are right now, eight blocks due east of the Capitol of the United States. I have people every day going through my neighborhood, going through garbage cans. If we want more of it, I suppose we just stick with what is in the underlying bill.

I might say it is not just urban areas, but rural areas as well. There are parts of my State which have very low populations, small communities, and jobs are scarce in some of these areas. An individual who has worked hard for 20 years in a small business in a rural area, and maybe that business fails, now this person may be willing to work all night and all day if given the chance, but the harsh reality is he or she may not be able to find a job. The truth of the matter is, it may take more than 4 months for a new business to come to that community.

We need to give States the option to offer food assistance to hard-working people who experience extreme hardship. It is wrong to force States to cut these people off from food assistance. Instead, we should give States the flexibility to continue to provide food stamps to a limited number, up to 20 percent of individuals who face some special hardship, Mr. President, 20 percent of the eligible population, instead of 10 percent that is in the underlying bill.

Mr. President, it may not be politically popular to care about adults who are hungry and cannot find a job, but I want my colleagues to think about what it would be like to be without food. We are not talking here about the luxuries. We are talking about food. It strikes me it is bad policy, and bad for the country, to knowingly create a class of desperate people across the country, struggling for the most basic human necessity, food.

Fundamentally, it does not make sense to deny food to people who are working hard to find a job and cannot find one. These people are less, not more likely to find a job if they are spending their time trying to find their next meal instead of trying to find their next job.

I ask my colleagues to join me in giving States additional flexibility to continue to provide food assistance to people who are unable to find work within the 4 months provided for in this legislation.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4945) was agreed to.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have two amendments by Senator LIEBERMAN which we are going to accept.

AMENDMENT NO. 4946

(Purpose: To add provisions to reduce the incidence of statutory rape)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator LIEBERMAN, I send an amendment to the desk. This amendment has been agreed to on both sides. I ask unanimous consent that it be agreed to and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], for Mr. LIEBERMAN, proposes an amendment numbered 4946.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Section 2101 is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (7) through (9) as paragraphs (8) through (10), respectively;

(2) in paragraph (10), as so redesignated, by inserting ", and protection of teenage girls from pregnancy as well as predatory sexual behavior" after "birth"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (6), the following:

(7) An effective strategy to combat teenage pregnancy must address the issue of male responsibility, including statutory rape culpability and prevention. The increase of teenage pregnancies among the youngest girls is particularly severe and is linked to predatory sexual practices by men who are significantly older.

(A) It is estimated that in the late 1980's the rate for girls age 14 and under giving birth increased 26 percent.

(B) Data indicates that at least half of the children born to teenage mothers are fathered by adult men. Available data suggests that almost 70 percent of births to teenage girls are fathered by men over age 20.

(C) Surveys of teen mothers have revealed that a majority of such mothers have histories of sexual and physical abuse, primarily with older adult men.

Section 402(a)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 2103(a)(1), is amended—

(1) by redesignating clauses (vi) and (vii) as clauses (vii) and (viii), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after clause (v), the following:

"(vi) Conduct a program, designed to reach State and local law enforcement officials, the education system, and relevant counseling services, that provides education and training on the problem of statutory rape so that teenage pregnancy prevention programs may be expanded in scope to include men.

Section 2908 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—" before "It"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

(b) JUSTICE DEPARTMENT PROGRAM ON STATUTORY RAPE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than January 1, 1997, the Attorney General shall establish and implement a program that—

(A) studies the linkage between statutory rape and teenage pregnancy, particularly by predatory older men committing repeat offenses; and

(B) educates State and local criminal law enforcement officials on the prevention and prosecution of statutory rape, focusing in particular on the commission of statutory rape by predatory older men committing repeat offenses, and any links to teenage pregnancy.

(c) "VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN INITIATIVE.—The Attorney General shall ensure that the Department of Justice's Violence Against Women initiative addresses the issue of statutory rape, particularly the commission of statutory rape by predatory older men committing repeat offenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4946) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, that was an amendment to minimize the incidence of statutory rape that is occurring in the United States.

AMENDMENT NO. 4947

(Purpose: To require States which receive grants under title XX of the Social Security Act to dedicate 1 percent of such grants to programs and services for minors)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have a second amendment on behalf of Senator LIEBERMAN. I make the same unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be agreed to and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], for Mr. LIEBERMAN, proposes an amendment numbered 4947.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Section 2903 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a) IN GENERAL.)—" before "Section"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

(b) DEDICATION OF BLOCK GRANT SHARE.—Section 2001 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397) is amended—

(1) in the matter of preceding paragraph (1), by inserting "(a)" before "For"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b) For any fiscal year in which a State receives an allotment under section 2003, such State shall dedicate an amount equal to 1 percent of such allotment to fund programs and services that teach minors to—

"(1) avoid out-of-wedlock pregnancies; and".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4947) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the subject matter of this amendment is a 1 percent setaside from the social services block grant which has been agreed to on our side by the respective chairman of the committee.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. If I might ask the manager of the bill, Senator BYRD and I would like to introduce a piece of legislation. Inasmuch as I see no other Member seeking recognition to offer an amendment to the pending business, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as if in morning business with the understanding that if additional amendments become available, we——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, could you give us an estimate as to how much time you might use?

Mr. DORGAN. I ask for 30 minutes and would expect not to use the entire 30 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I will not object so long as the Senator would add that the time used, even though it is as in morning business, would be charged against the time remaining on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. DORGAN and Mr. BYRD pertaining to the introduction of S. 1978 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MACK). The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida, Senator GRAHAM, offered an amendment on behalf of himself and the Senator from Arkansas Friday afternoon. Unhappily, I was not here and did not get a chance to speak on it. I would like to seize the opportunity now to just make a few remarks.

Before doing that, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to yield to the Senator from North Dakota to allow him to lay down an amendment without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4948

(Purpose: To strike provisions relating to the Indian child care set aside)

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk sponsored by myself and cosponsored by Senator MCCAIN and Senator INOUYE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], for himself, Mr. MCCAIN, and Mr. INOUYE, proposes an amendment numbered 4948.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In section 2813(1), strike subparagraph (B).

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I intend to discuss this amendment briefly at some point following the presentation by the Senator from Arkansas, and I very much appreciate his indulgence.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BUMPERS. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. This is child support regarding Indians?

We passed it on voice vote on Thursday.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator repeat that? I am sorry; I did not hear him.

Mr. DOMENICI. I just addressed the amendment sent to the desk.

Mr. DORGAN. It is a different amendment. It deals with the 3 percent set aside, and I do not believe it has been passed.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could we have the amendment?

I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

AMENDMENT NO. 4936

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, the amendment being offered by Senator GRAHAM of Florida and me is the same one we offered last year. It might have a few minor changes in it, but essentially it simply says that the block grant formula in this welfare bill should be changed to take into consideration the number of poor children in each State.

I am not very crazy about this bill to begin with, but I cannot possibly vote for a bill that discriminates against the State of Arkansas to the extent this one does. It is not just Arkansas, it is particularly Southern States, but a lot of other States get caught up in it, too.

Under the formula, the District of Columbia will get $4,222 for each welfare recipient and the State of Arkansas will get $390. Why is a child in the District of Columbia worth 11 times as much as a poor child in Arkansas? That is a legitimate question, is it not?

I will tell you the answer. The answer is, through the years, the Federal Government has matched the States to some percentage or another. It is not the same in every State. For example, in my State, because we are a relatively poor State, we get a big match, I think 73 to 75 percent. So for every dollar we put up, we get about $3 from the Federal Government. The District of Columbia does not do quite as well. But the reason the District of Columbia gets such a staggering amount of money per child is because they have used a tremendous amount of their resources to put into the AFDC Program.

That is perfectly laudable and I am not criticizing the District of Columbia. But I will tell you something, and it gives me no joy to say it publicly, I come from a State which has one of the lowest per capita incomes in the Nation. We are a poor State. We have been ever since the War Between the States. We have tried everything in the world and continue to strive to do everything we can to improve the plight of our people. We tried to improve our economy so there would be more jobs and better paying jobs, and in the past several years we have met with some success. But we are not New York, California, or New Jersey in per capita income.

The reason this bill is fundamentally flawed and unfair is because it says to you, the State of Arkansas, this is what you have received for the last 3 years, 1991 through 1994, and that is what you are going to continue to receive. In short, if you were poor, no matter how hard you tried to do better under the AFDC program, if you were poor and simply could not do it, it is tough.

What does this bill do? It says we are locking you in on the basis of what you got during that 3-year period. I do not care if you had floods, tornadoes, if you had a wave of immigrants move into your State, which brings a lot of poverty to States like Florida, you are still going to get what you got for 3 years, on average. There is a little 2½ percent "gimmie" in the bill, but not enough to amount to anything.

One of the things that really is a travesty in this bill is the treatment of AFDC administrative costs. I hate to say these things because I am not jumping on other States. I am simply trying to defend my own. But look what has happened in New York and New Jersey. The nationwide average, in 1994, of administrative costs for administering the program we have now was $53.42. During that same period of time, the average cost of administering the program in New York was $106.68 and in New Jersey $105.26. What do we do under this bill? We lock that administrative cost in and say we will continue to compensate you, no matter how inefficient you may have been.

I am sorry the Senator from West Virginia left the floor. The average administrative cost for administering the AFDC Program in West Virginia is $13.34, and that is what they are going to get through the year 2000 if this bill passes, while New York will be receiving eight times as much. We are going to give them that, lock them in, no matter how inefficient they may be in administering the program.

One of the interesting things about this bill was pointed out in the New York Times this morning. Let us take my State as an example, and let us assume push comes to shove and we are running out of money, we are suddenly not going to be able to continue. The Federal Government says, "That's tough, we gave you the block grant, you have to live with it. We do not care how many poor children you have, we are going to give you what you got as an average between 1991 and 1994, and you will live with it. Do not come back up here with your hand out."

Do you know what they allow the States to do? Kick people off welfare. Each State can make it's work requirements as stringent as they want to make them. What does the Federal Government do in such a case? We do not say, "If you kick those people off welfare we are going to quit giving you the money for that family." We continue to give them the money for the family. So there is an incentive to the States, if they have any difficulty at all with the program, to kick people off, knowing they are going to continue to get the same amount of money.

I do not want to take too much time. I know there is not a lot of time between now and 2 o'clock when we go to the agricultural appropriations bill. But one of the most troubling things about this bill, completely aside from this grossly unfair funding formula, is that I have heard people in the U.S. Senate and in Congress say things that are so punitive in nature. It is as though we are passing this bill to punish people for being poor. You can call that bleeding heart liberalism—call it whatever you want to call it. I am not for keeping people on the welfare cycle. I am for reforming welfare, to make jobs a lot more attractive to those people. I am for reforming welfare so women can have day care for their children and get job training and find a job, preferably one that provides health care so we do not have to pay for Medicaid for them.

But in the debate, just to use my own State as an example, there is sort of the suggestion that the youngsters, the babies that are born in College Station, AR, which is an unspeakably poor area, have the same opportunities as the children born in Pleasant Valley, our most affluent suburb. And everybody who does not happen to make it as well as the people in Pleasant Valley, somehow or another we seem to think they are lowdown.

I said on the floor before and I will say it again, my brother went to Harvard Law School, courtesy of the taxpayers of the United States on the GI bill. We have a little difficult time sometimes discussing these issues, but I remind him that it was more than Harvard Law School that made him successful.

I would not be a U.S. Senator if I had not been able to go to a good law school, like Northwestern, also compliments of the U.S. Government, who paid for all of it, except what Betty made working.

So I remind my brother about the largess of the Federal Government, which I have been trying to pay back all of my life, by thanking the taxpayers, being a good public servant, and doing my dead-level best to make this a better country for my children and grandchildren to grow up in. But I also remind my brother that we were also fortunate because we chose our parents well. These AFDC children did not choose their parents well. Somehow there is a certain vindictiveness, a punitive aspect to this bill toward those children, a lot of whom are going to suffer under the terms of this bill, and suffer a lot, because they had the temerity not to choose their parents well.

So, I do not have any trouble voting against this bill, especially because it discriminates against my State in a totally unacceptable way. I know my State. I was Governor of my State. I know where the money comes from, and I know where it goes. We have areas along the Mississippi River, which we call the delta, and if we are going to pass a bill to alleviate the tax burden on people in the District of Columbia because their people are moving out because of crime or the tax rate or something else, I want to include the delta.

I can tell you, you will not find an inner city in America with more deplorable poverty than you will find in the delta of Mississippi and Arkansas. So I want them to have the same break.

As I say, if we were not struggling to do the best we can, I would not object. But we do not have the money that New York, New Jersey, California, and other States have to put into this program. It is not just Arkansas. Mr. President, your home State of Florida, as you know all too well without me saying it, will lose $1 billion under this bill.

The two Senators from Texas voted against the Graham-Bumpers proposal last year—and I assume they will do it again—and it cost the State of Texas $3 billion. And on it goes. It is a grossly unfair formula. It is indefensible.

In this morning's New York Times, my position is vindicated at least by one columnist, David Ellwood, who is professor of public policy at Harvard School of Government. He says, and this is just a portion of it:

> States would get block grants to use for welfare and work programs. But the grants for child care, job training, workfare, and cash assistance combined would amount to less than $15 per poor child per week in * * * Mississippi and Arkansas.

Mr. President, $15 a week for all of those things.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUMPERS. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does that not mean that is what they are getting now?

Mr. BUMPERS. I beg your pardon?

Mr. DOMENICI. Does that not mean that is what they are getting now?

Mr. BUMPERS. It means that is what they have gotten as an average for 1991 and 1994.

Mr. DOMENICI. Are you suggesting it is appreciably better than 1994?

Mr. BUMPERS. Well, I am sure it is somewhat better.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the formula become more satisfactory if it was brought to 1995? I do not think we got the evidence. My point is, however we go—I do not know which way the Senate is going to go—the truth of the matter is, those poor children you are speaking of in those two States are not getting very much now. That is the reason they are not going to get very much under this bill.

Mr. BUMPERS. They are not going to get very much, but why do you want to lock in an inequity? You say it has always been unequal but want to lock it in?

Mr. DOMENICI. I did not say that. I wanted to make sure the RECORD reflected when you expressed yourself—and I have great respect for you. You are representing a cause and an approach that ought to be looked at carefully. But when you say they are only going to get $15 on average, it has to be made clear they are not getting much more than $15 now.

Mr. BUMPERS. That's true, they are not getting much more than that. I can tell you the number of poor children in my State is higher by far than the national average.

What I am saying is that if you want to address the problems of poor people, go where the poor people are, not where the people are more affluent. That is the reason I object; I object to these staggering sums going to the other States.

In 1994, Arkansas had a terrible Medicaid shortage of funds. We could not come up with our matching share to the extent that was necessary to provide health care for all of our poor children. Do you know what the State legislature did under the Governor's leadership? They passed one of the most unpopular taxes you can pass in any State. It was a nickel a bottle on soft drinks, and the money it raised kept us from kicking people out of nursing homes, and it kept us from having poor children on the streets who need health care and are not able to get it.

That is the reason I am complaining today. It was a monumental effort on the part of Arkansas to come up with our share of the money so we could take care of our children.

So here we have a formula that says in the future you are going to get $390 a year per poor child. And there are 38 additional States that will be hurt by this bill. You would think it would be adopted with flying colors.

If I may continue with the article from Mr. Ellwood of the New York Times:

> Governor Thompson says he can make reform succeed with block grants. But the legislation provides more than three times as much money per poor child in wealthier States like Wisconsin, California, and New York as it does for many States with much higher levels of poverty. Even if they wanted to, there is no way poor States could carry out plans like Governor Thompson's.

Here is a man who spent his entire life studying this problem. He closes this article by saying:

> Welfare politics has turned ugly.
> Rhetoric has replaced reality: saying a bill is about work or that cuts are in the best interests of children does not make it so. Apparently the legislation is being driven by election-year fears. But Members of Congress and President Clinton need to stand up for our children. This bill should not be passed. If legislation like this is adopted, I hope the President vetoes it in the name of real welfare reform.

Mr. President, I spoke about election-year issues the other day in the Energy Committee, on which I sit, when we were dealing with the Boundary Water Canoe Wilderness Area, about 1,100 lakes along the Minnesota-Canadian border. I went out there in 1978 for Wendy Anderson, who was serving in the Senate from the State of Minnesota at the time and with whom I served as Governor. The Boundary Water Canoe Wilderness Area came up the year Wendy was running for reelection. It was a big political issue. Wendy lost his seat, not for that reason only. But he lost plenty of votes because of the Boundary Water Canoe Wilderness Area dispute.

Now we have another big Boundary Water Canoe Wilderness Area dispute in Minnesota. I am not taking sides on that necessarily, but there are a lot of ads being run in Minnesota right now. I said in the committee—and I mean it—I will do everything I can to keep a bill of this kind from passing this year, because it is entirely too important for the U.S. Congress to be dealing with in an election year.

That is exactly the way I feel about this welfare bill. It ought to be passed next year, not now in an election year where everybody is trying to grow hair on their chest to prove they are tougher on welfare than everyone else. But we are not going to wait. As a consequence, we are getting ready to pass a bad bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article by David T. Ellwood in the New York Times be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WELFARE REFORM IN NAME ONLY

(By David T. Ellwood)

BONDURANT, WY.—I have spent much of my professional life seeking to reform welfare. I have worked with Republican and Democratic governors. And until I returned to academia a year ago, I was fortunate to be a co-chairman of President Clinton's welfare reform effort. I deeply believe that the well-being of the nation's children depends on real reform. We must turn away from the failed system focused on determining eligibility and check writing and create a new one based on work and responsibility.

But the Republican bills in the House and Senate are far more about budget-cutting than work. Bathed in the rhetoric of reform, they are more dangerous than most people realize. No bill that is likely to push more than a million additional children into poverty—many in working families—is real reform.

Proponents claim the bills are about work, and the legislation does obligate states to require large numbers of recipients to work. Fair enough. Serious work requirements are crucial to meaningful change. But it's one thing to write work into legislation, and it's another to get recipients jobs.

Gov. Tommy Thompson of Wisconsin, a Republican, has emphasized that reform often involves spending more, not less, money on things like job training and child care. Instead, the Congressional bills would make major cuts—reducing food stamps for the working poor, aid to disabled children and to legal immigrants who are not yet citizens. When the dust settles, there would not be much money for welfare reform at all.

States would get block grants to use for welfare and work programs. But the grants for child care, job training, workfare and cash assistance combined would amount to less than $15 per poor child per week in poor Southern states like Mississippi and Arkansas. Moving people from welfare to work is hard. On $15 a week—whom are we kidding?

Governor Thompson says he can make reform succeed with block grants. But the legislation provides more than three times as much money per poor child in wealthier states like Wisconsin, California and New York as it does for many states with much higher levels of poverty. Even if they wanted to, there is no way poor states could carry out plans like Governor Thompson's.

States cannot and will not do the impossible. The legislation gives them an out. They may set time limits of any length and simply cut families off welfare regardless of their circumstances—and still get their full Federal block grants.

It won't matter if the people want to work. It won't matter if they would happily take workfare jobs so they could provide something for their families. It won't matter if there are no private jobs available.

States may want to offer workfare jobs, but limited Federal grants may preclude that. People who are willing to work but are unable to find a job should not be abandoned. If they are, what happens to their children?

What is dangerous about the Republican legislation is not that it gives states the lead or reduces Federal rules. States really are the source of most creative work on true reform. Witness the approximately 40 states for which some Federal regulations have been waived.

It is worrisome that this legislation places new and often mean-spirited demands on states while changing the social and financial rules of the game in a way that strongly encourages cutting support rather than getting people jobs.

What is particularly distressing about the pre-election rush to enact legislation is that significant reform is finally starting at the state level, with active support from the Clinton Administration. Some remarkably exciting ideas (as well as some alarming ones) are being tried. There is no evidence that a lack of Federal legislation has seriously slowed this momentum.

Indeed, President Clinton has talked about issuing an executive order requiring states to put people to work after two years—without new legislation and without any danger of sizable rises in child poverty or major benefit cuts. Passing the legislation now in Congress seems far more likely to slow reform than speed it—and it could result not in greater independence of poor families but in a spiral of ever-increasing desperation.

Welfare politics has turned ugly. Rhetoric has replaced reality: saying a bill is about work or that cuts are in the best interests of children does not make it so. Apparently the legislation is being driven by election-year fears. But members of Congress and President Clinton need to stand up for our children. These bills should not be passed. And if legislation like this is adopted, I hope the President vetoes it in the name of real welfare reform.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am certain that we will have some arguments in opposition to the amendment for doing the formula differently than Senator BUMPERS has addressed. I am trying to see if one of those who is from the committee that wrote the bill would come down and do that. If not, I will address the issue.

But I say, the part of your argument—I say this to Senator BUMPERS—that says we ought to put this matter off, I do not think so. I think you ought to get your chance here to present your case. I think we ought to proceed.

Part of the argument you make indicates that we have waited far too long to do something to reform this system and reforming the system in the context I am speaking of right now. I am not necessarily speaking about the workfare approach. It is way past due for that.

But essentially we have sat by for years since AFDC, a cash program, came into being decades ago. We have let it develop to the extent it has characteristics of the type you are speaking to. Obviously, poor States were given the option to have very poor programs. But if we would have told them, "You ought to have richer programs," they would have said, "We can't afford any richer program."

A State like New York, which you speak of, has very, very high taxes. They have had a very, very liberal approach to taxing their people. Thus, they can put up a lot of money for welfare. Since it is a high-pay State, they decided to have a very hefty welfare program. As a matter of fact, they have plenty of poor people in spite of all that.

I did not interrupt when you said we ought to put the money where the poor people are, but I would venture to say that there are far more poor people in the State of New York than there are in three or four of the States you spoke of combined, certainly more than Arkansas, Mississippi, States of that size.

Just because New York has a very high wage scale does not mean there are not a lot of poor people there. But the problem is, we are confronted with a welfare program that grew in an environment where we asked States to match. We gave them options as to how much they wanted to put into welfare. We even gave them options of how much they would pay the beneficiaries and how much per child in a welfare home. We have just left it there for years and did not do anything about it.

Now we have States with hardly a program in terms of real dollars and States like New York, which has spent a lot of money on the program. Sooner or later we have to decide, in reform, what do we do about that? Perhaps you suggest that you have a better idea on what we do to make that a situation in the future that is not as bad as you see it in the past. But this is not an easy one. Nor is it an easy one in Medicare. You addressed Medicare for a fleeting moment about——

Mr. BUMPERS. Medicaid.

Mr. DOMENICI. Excuse me. Medicaid. About your State being unable to pay. One of the things we are forgetting here in the United States and in this land when we debate Medicaid reform is that States cannot afford the Medicaid Program we are telling them to have.

Your State fell short of money a few years ago. Mine is short this year. There is $21 million they do not have to pay for the program in Medicaid. We only match it with 25 cents on the dollar. I do not know what yours is, but I would imagine, considering the profile of poverty, the demographics of poverty, you are probably at a 25-percent match, meaning that the Feds pay most of it, but it is so expensive to provide the service under the current system the States cannot even pay for it.

If we think here the evolution of a formula in transition was difficult for welfare, it is much more difficult on Medicaid because of the very same facts, plus the program is much, much more encompassing in terms of how many billions of dollars it spent. Welfare is a small program in terms of the dollars spent on Medicaid, even in your State and my State.

So it is not going to be easy to come up with a formula because we have let them grow up side by side with States like New York and States like Arkansas and States like Mississippi or New Mexico. I take that back. New Mexico's welfare program is in the middle of the ranks. Its Medicaid is about in the middle of the Nation.

So I would have asked that Harvard professor who wrote that article you quoted from—it sounded brilliant—I would ask—maybe he has done it—but where is his welfare program? He says we ought to have welfare reform. We need one. It is easy to say, throw one out. We need one. We have to make some decisions and get on with trying it. I yield the floor at this point.

Mr. BUMPERS. I wonder if the Senator would yield for a moment? Would the Senator yield for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. DOMENICI. I would be pleased to.

Mr. BUMPERS. Let me make one other observation, because I know the Senator has labored in the vineyard a long time on welfare. It is one of those issues for which the time never seems right. I said we ought to do it next year. We tried to do it last year, which was not an election year. It did not work out.

But I think the Senator, for whom I have the utmost respect—and when I talk about Members of Congress that seem to lack some compassion, I am certainly not talking about my friend from New Mexico. I know he has labored long and hard for this. It is a complex issue. The deeper I got into it on this amendment, the more complex it became.

But I will say this—and I think the Senator would agree with me—you cannot make a program like this work, not the way it ought to work, when, for example, a child in Massachusetts or New York or someplace else is worth 10 times as much as a child in Arkansas or Mississippi. We are not ever going to get our act together when we have that much disparity. I am not saying there does not have to be effort, because effort is important.

Some of these States have made monumental efforts. But effort is a comparative thing. We have made efforts, too. Compared to some others maybe it was not as great. When the Senator talks about how many poor children there are in New York, I know the Senator is correct when he says there are probably more poor children in New York than there are in Mississippi, Alabama, and Arkansas put together.

But we are talking about poor children as a percentage of the population. We are talking about how many poor children you have compared to all the children in the State or all the people in the State. When you get to that point, New York is not in the running with Arkansas. I want to say to the Senator from New Mexico, I appreciate his comments. As I say, I have the utmost respect for his efforts to get this bill passed and all the effort he has made in the past. I just happen to disagree with him. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if we could do this, I say to Senator BUMPERS. The time is 1 o'clock. We are going to be finished and run out of time at 2 o'clock. I want to offer an opportunity for a couple of Senators who would be very adversely affected by the Senator's amendment to speak, not as long as the Senator did, but for some period of time. I am going to make one observation and then ask consent.

I say to Senators, they should know, for instance, under this amendment the State of Arkansas will have 151 percent increase; the State of Louisiana will have 170 percent; New Mexico would have an increase of 3 percent; California would have a reduction of $1.2 billion, a 31 percent reduction, New York a reduction of 49 percent; Massachusetts, 50 percent; and on and on. I think some of those Senators might want to come down and make their case as to why the formula should be based on what they have been putting into the program during the immediate past decade or so.

Having said that, I ask unanimous consent we set aside the Bumpers amendment, but from the Republican side we reserve up to 10 minutes of the hour that we might have in rebuttal, and that Senator BUMPERS be allowed, if that occurs, an additional 5 minutes, if we use 10.

Mr. BUMPERS. Either Senator GRAHAM or myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, let me make one other observation: According to the charts Senator GRAHAM has compiled, I do not know where the Senator got the figure that we will get such a big increase. The truth is we will get $282 million less per capita over the next 6 years simply because we are using the 1991 and 1994 formula.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will be happy to make available the formula of the Congressional Research Service, July 18, 1996. This formula has a chart for the increase in every State, and we just took your increase and put the percentage on it. That is where we got that number. We will be happy to make the chart available.

Mr. President, let me make one last point, then we will move to the next amendment. I use this time off the bill.

Mr. President, whatever the distinguished Senator from Arkansas has said relative to what we have been paying as part of the welfare program of the United States for children and this huge disparity of 10 to 1, the point I want to make is that is not the feature of this bill. That is what has transpired over time. It is the reality today. Maybe Senator BUMPERS and others would say that is why welfare has failed. I did not hear that before. I thought it was some other characteristic, but that is the truth.

Now we are confronted with, if you are going to change the basic quality of welfare and what is expected, what do you do about that financial disparity that existed over time, which is extreme. This bill tends to perpetuate that for 5 years in the form of a block grants, but there is a lot of flexibility added.

I do not want to speak to that amendment any more because we reserved time. I yield the floor.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, just prior to Senator BUMPERS making his statement, I offered an amendment. This is not the amendment that was agreed to last week. This is a different amendment. We have provided the amendment, I believe, or at least discussed it with both sides.

I wanted to take just 2 or 3 minutes to discuss that amendment, and I also wanted to introduce a second amendment which I believe is going to be agreed to. I am offering the second amendment on behalf of Senator DASCHLE, myself, Senator DOMENICI, and Senator MCCAIN. It is an amendment that has been worked out by both sides to exempt certain individuals living in areas of low labor market participation from the 5-year limitation on assistance.

If I might, in a capsule, point out that the welfare reform bill provides a 20-percent exemption that is available to the States. What we could have and likely would have are circumstances where there are areas in which virtually no jobs are available and you have very high unemployment. That situation would soak up the exemption almost immediately. This amendment addresses and corrects that and provides some more flexibility to the States.

AMENDMENT NO. 4949

(Purpose: To exempt certain individuals living in areas of low labor market participation from the 5-year limitation on assistance)

Mr. DORGAN. I offer this amendment, and I send it to the desk.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JEFFORDS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], for Mr. DASCHLE, for himself, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mr. MCCAIN, proposes an amendment No. 4949.

Mr. DORGAN. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 250, line 2, strike "and (C)" and insert ", (C), and (D)".

On page 252, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following:

"(D) EXCEPTION FOR EXTREMELY LOW LABOR MARKET PARTICIPATION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In determining the number of months for which an adult received assistance under the State program funded under this part, the State may disregard any and all months in which the individual resided in an area of extremely low labor market participation (as defined under clause (ii).

"(ii) EXTREMELY LOW LABOR MARKET PARTICIPATION AREA.—For purposes of clause (i), an adult is considered to be living in an area of extremely low labor market participation if such adult resides on a reservation of an Indian Tribe—

"(I) with a population of at least 1,000 individuals; and

"(II) with at least 50% of the adult population not employed, as determined by the Secretary using the best available data from a Federal agency.

On page 252, line 10, strike "(D)" and insert "(E)".

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am a cosponsor, and I indicate so that everybody would understand this does not say this is mandated. This says that the Governors, in putting together their plan for their State, can, if they find an area—and this is pretty much going to be Indian areas, I believe, because of the enormous unemployment number; it is 50 percent—it will be available as a flexible tool in terms of putting together packages.

Mr. DORGAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. We accept the amendment on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4949) was agreed to.

Mr. DORGAN. I move to table the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to reconsider the vote.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4948

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, if I might just for a couple of minutes address the previous amendment that I offered that deals with the tribal child care set-aside. I hope we perhaps might be able to see this amendment accepted before we go to votes tomorrow.

The amendment I have offered on behalf of myself, Senator MCCAIN, and Senator INOUYE, restores the current set-aside for Indian child care funding. The current set-aside is 3 percent of the child care development block grant, which is now available to Indian tribes for child care. The welfare reform bill cuts that 3 percent down to 1 percent.

The funds the Indian tribes are now able to access with the child care development block grant have been very important. They have allowed the tribes to successfully run a wide range of child care programs. In 1994, that set-aside helped more than 500 tribes provide child care.

Last year, when the welfare reform bills passed both the House and the Senate, they retained the 3-percent set-aside for tribal child care programs. The conference bill inexplicably reduced that tribal allocation from 3 percent to 1 percent, the same level that is now contained in this reconciliation bill.

The reduction in the tribal set-aside occurs at the very same time that State child care funds would increase substantially. The question I ask is, if an increase in child care is critical to State efforts to move people from welfare to work, and I believe it is, then why is it not also critical for real welfare reform in Indian country and for Indian tribes to provide child care?

I want to make a point that Indian children under age 6 are more than twice as likely as the average child in America to live in circumstances of poverty. Indian children under 6 who live on reservations are three times more likely to live in circumstances of poverty than non-Indian children.

I toured, not so long ago, a child care center on a facility in North Dakota that is jointly run by four tribes, United Tribes Technical College. It is a wonderful place where American Indians come to receive educational and vocational training. They study, they graduate, they go out and get work. That center is run by a wonderful man named David Gipp, who does an extraordinarily good job. They have a child care center at U-Tech. I have toured that child care center a couple of times.

U-Tech reminds you of the need and the importance of child care in this building-block process to move people from welfare to work. You have to be able to get the job skills. Often, to get job skills, if you have children, you have to try to find child care. All of us know that it is not just in Indian country, but across this country, increasingly, that poverty is a problem often faced by young women with children in single-parent households.

Now, when they try to get skills and then get a job, the question is, What kind of child care can they access to take care of their children? To them, just like in every other household, the most important thing in their lives are their children. They want to make sure the children have an opportunity. If they go to work, when they go to work, they want to have an opportunity to place their children in child care in a place where they have some confidence and trust. That is why this amendment is so important.

It breaks your heart to take a look at what is happening in some areas of the country with very high unemployment, especially Indian reservations, with people who want an opportunity to work. They want a job. On many of these reservations—and we have a couple in North Dakota—there virtually are no jobs. If you look at the map and try to figure out, where do we carve out a reservation and say these are Indian reservations, do you think they carved out the fertile Red River Valley? No. They carved out reservations where there are no great opportunities and where there has not been a substantial amount of economic activity, not very many jobs, not very many companies moving in to provide opportunities.

As we attempt to decide how to reform the welfare system—and we should, because it does not work very well—we need to understand that the two linchpins that can help people move from welfare to work are child care and health care. The absence of one or both means that you cannot succeed in moving someone from welfare to work. The presence of both means that you can say to people that we expect something from you in response to what we are going to offer for you. Part of that is job training and employment, but also attendant to it is adequate and proper child care. I do hope that, between now and tomorrow, we might find an opportunity to see whether this amendment might be accepted.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the amendment offered by my colleague, Senator DORGAN. The amendment ensures that Indian tribes will continue to receive 3 percent of funding provided under the child care development block grant program, as it stands under current law.

I am pleased that the proposed budget reconciliation measure under consideration includes provisions which I and other Senators sponsored to address the unique needs and requirements of Indian country to directly administer welfare programs.

Mr. President, welfare assistance programs are intended to protect poor people and children. As reported, the bill does not go far enough to ensure that Indian tribes, particularly Indian children, who are the most vulnerable of our population and among the poorest of the poor, will be protected. Indian children under the age of 6 are more than twice as likely as the average non-Indian child to live in poverty. Indian children under the age of 6 residing on Indian reservations are three times more likely than non-Indian children to live in poverty.

The need in Indian country is enormous and far outweighs the limited Federal dollars allocated to Indian tribal governments. Because the need for assistance to Indian children is so compelling, I have been quite concerned that the reported bill reduced the tribal allocation from 3 percent to 1 percent. Such a cut would have harmed tribal efforts to bring more Indian people into the work force and resulted in diminishment of existing tribal child care programs.

Mr. President, I believe we should maintain the 3-percent-funding allocation under present law to ensure that Indian children receive an equal and fair opportunity to a brighter future as is provided to all other American children. This commitment also honors the unique trust relationship that the United States has with Indian tribal governments.

I am pleased that we have reached agreement to adopt this amendment and thank Senator DOMENICI, chairman of the Budget Committee, and Senator ROTH, chairman of the Finance Committee, for accepting it. I also want to thank Senator DORGAN for once again demonstrating his commitment to improve the lives of Indian children. I urge my colleagues to work diligently at conference with the House to ensure that the welfare bill we send to the President maintains this provision.

AMENDMENT NO. 4934

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I want to make one additional comment, not on this amendment, but on the one offered by Senator CONRAD. That amendment is the issue of the optional food stamp block grant.

My understanding of the amendment is that the block grant option that exists in the bill is a problem, and the amendment would repeal the block grant. The amendment's supporters believe—and I firmly believe—that if we decide that it is a function of national will, a national objective to decide that those who do not have enough to eat, then we are going to try to help get them some food.

If that is a national issue, it is not an issue between one county and another county, or one State and another State, or one city and another city. It is an issue of national determination that we do not want people in this country to be hungry. We do not want kids to go without meals. We want to develop a national standard that makes sure this country, as good and generous and as strong as this country is, can feed those people among us who have suffered some difficulties, who were unfortunate enough to be born into circumstances of poverty, who have had some other disadvantages, and who find themselves down and out, down on their luck, and also hungry.

We know what to do about hunger. This is not some mysterious disease for which there is no cure. We know what causes hunger and how to resolve it.

Part of this bill deals with the issues of resolving hunger and helping people get prepared for the workplace. Another part says you cannot prepare 8-year-olds for a job. We ought not to prepare 10-year-olds for a job. If we have kids living in poverty, or grownups living in poverty, we want to make sure that we have a system to say that we will help them get back on their feet. While we are helping them get back on their feet, we do not want them to be hungry—kids, adults, anybody in this country. That is why we have had a Food Stamp Program. Is it perfect? No. Has it worked well? Sure. We ought not, in any way, decide that we should retreat from that. That is why I so strongly support the amendment offered by Senator CONRAD and Senator JEFFORDS.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 4948

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, on the amendment which is pending, with reference to the 1 versus 3 percent set-aside, we have cleared this with the committee of jurisdiction. What will happen when we adopt this amendment is that we will return the percentage to its current law. This is a ceiling, not a mandated level. For those reasons, the committee indicates that we will accept it on our side.

Therefore, I yield back any time on the amendment and indicate that we are willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4948) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DORGAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator for offering the amendment.

Mr. DORGAN. I thank the Senator from New Mexico for his help.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4950

(Purpose: To strike amendments to the summer food service program for children)

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], for Mrs. MURRAY, proposes an amendment numbered 4950.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike section 1206.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, Senator MURRAY is unavoidably detained. I am proposing her amendment.

This is an amendment she discussed last week and withdrew with the opportunity to be able to submit it today. It strikes section 1206. The bill reduces the rate of the Summer Food Service Program.

The Food Research Action Council's surveys and past experience leads them to conclude that the cut could result in:

A 30- to 35-percent drop in the number of sponsors;

A 20-percent cut in the number of children participating;

Many larger sponsors dropping their smaller sites;

A significant decline in meat quality as sponsors cut food costs.

I ask unanimous consent that "the need for the Murray amendment striking provisions relating to the Summer Food Program" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The need for the Murray amendment striking provisions relating to the summer food program:

The Senate bill makes an eleven percent cut to the reimbursement rate for lunches provided in the summer food program. The reduction (a 23/20 cent cut on each lunch, from $2.16/$2.12 to $1.93) is substantial. Many programs around the country serve 50 or fewer children. Over half of current sponsors already lose money under current rates. Their margins to absorb cuts are extremely narrow. Estimates vary by state, but the Food Research Action Council's surveys and past experience lead them to conclude that the cut could result in: a 30–35 percent drop in the number of sponsors (especially in rural districts); a 20 percent cut in the number of children participating; many larger sponsors dropping their smaller sites; weaker supervision and monitoring and a decline in program integrity; a significant decline in meal quality as sponsors cut food costs; and very few new sponsors. It is already difficult to recruit new sponsors, even though only one in six eligible children receive meals. The recruitment of new sponsors by advocacy groups would likely stop, and with it, future growth.

The effect of the amendment:

Strikes section 1206 of the bill, which reduces the rates for the Summer Food Program.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. We are not going to respond yet. We are just beginning to understand the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4951

(Purpose: To provide additional amendments)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I offer in behalf of Senator ROTH technical amendments to the bill. These have been requested by the Finance Committee and been approved and recommended for adoption by the majority and the minority of the Finance Committee. I send the technical amendments to the desk and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], for Mr. ROTH, proposes an amendment numbered 4951.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 193, line 8, strike "is" and insert "has been".

On page 238, line 4, insert "any temporary layoffs and" after "including".

On page 238, line 6, strike "overtime" and insert "nonovertime".

On page 238, strike line 7 through 13, and insert the following:

"wages, or employment benefits; and".

Mr. EXON. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4951) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4952

(Purpose: To strike additional penalties for consecutive failure to satisfy minimum participation rates)

Mr. GRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. I rise for purposes of offering an amendment. I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] proposes an amendment numbered 4952:

Strike section 409(a)(3)(C) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 2103(a)(1).

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, as read, the purpose of this motion to strike is to strike section 409(a)(3)(C) which was added to this bill during its consideration before the Senate Finance Committee. The provision which I would offer to strike provides:

> Notwithstanding the limitation described in Subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall reduce the grant payable to the State . . . for a fiscal year, in addition to the reduction imposed under subsection (A), by an amount equal to 5 percent of the State family assistance grant, if the Secretary determines that the State failed to comply with section 407(a) for 2 or more consecutive preceding fiscal years.

That language was added in the Senate Finance Committee to language that had been in the bill in its previous form, in its current reconciliation version, as well as in other versions of welfare reform. That previous version states that the Secretary can sanction a State which fails to meet its work requirements by an amount up to 5 percent of the State's family assistance grant.

The amendment that was offered, first, removes the discretion from the Secretary; second, instead of saying up to 5 percent, it makes it an absolute 5 percent in addition to whatever sanction has been levied in the previous fiscal year against a State which failed to meet its work requirement.

Why am I offering this amendment? I am offering it, first, because the language of the amendment is very obscure. In its claimed reading, it seems to say that there will be an additional amount, equal to 5 percent of the State's family assistance grant, as a sanction if the State had failed for 2 consecutive years to meet its work requirements. That, apparently, is not the way it is being interpreted by others, including one of the groups which is strongly opposed to this provision, which is the National Conference of State Legislatures. They are interpreting this to be a cumulative sanction. That it would be, if you failed to meet your work requirements for 2 consecutive years and had been subject to a penalty because of failure to do so, you would be subject to an additional mandatory 5-percent cut in the third year; an additional 5-percent cut, or a cumulative 15 percent in the next year; an additional 5 percent in the year after that, up to a maximum of a 25-percent reduction in your grant.

So one of my concerns with this very important provision that was added—frankly, as a member of the Finance Committee, I can stipulate, without any consideration by the committee—is, just what does it mean? It could be very draconian in its impact. It could be only very serious.

So that is one issue. A second issue is the fact that the States, through the organizations that we have looked to, to do much of the policy work for a bill which purports to grant increased authority to States, are opposed to this provision.

I ask unanimous consent to have a series of letters from State-based organizations printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. GRAHAM. I would like to use, illustrative of the letters I received, this letter dated today, July 22, from the National Conference of State Legislatures. This letter states, in part:

> State legislators want welfare reform to succeed. In order to succeed, we need adequate implementation time to craft comprehensive welfare reform that best fits the needs in our individual states. In S. 1956, both the work participation rate requirements and penalties begin the first year of the block grant. Therefore, we strongly support Senator Bob Graham's amendment to strike the language imposing a cumulative penalty of five percent of the block grant per year on states that fail to meet the mandated work requirements. Imposing harsh and excessive penalties will only make it more difficult for states to succeed. State legislators are committed to welfare reform and have proved it through passage of numerous laws reforming their welfare systems. We have asked the federal government for flexibility to change the current system and hope for legislation to empower the states.
>
> The Congress has challenged us to go even further, yet the current bill leaves no room for adjustment, even if a state experiences a recession, high unemployment or natural disaster. Despite our best effort, there may be states who cannot meet the work requirements. To add compounding financial penalties will severely restrict state efforts even further—just at the moment when they could use assistance from their federal partner.

Mr. President, the letter from the National Conference of State Legislatures points out a fundamental difference between the sanction that we had previously proposed, and which stays in this bill, and that which was added in the Finance Committee. The previous sanction made it in the discretion of the Secretary of HHS as to whether to levy such a penalty, and at what level to do it up to 5 percent. So the Secretary could take into consideration—maybe the reason the State of Vermont failed to meet its work requirement was because they had an unexpected natural disaster in Vermont, as we did in Florida with Hurricane Andrew, or maybe they had an unusual economic recession and more people were unable to find work, and therefore they could not meet the work requirements for those persons who are coming off welfare. The cumulative language gives no such discretion to the Secretary to take those kinds of real-world conditions into account.

A third reason for offering this amendment is the reason that was the basis of discussion earlier today by my colleague, Senator BUMPERS, and myself on Friday. That is, we start this process from a very inequitable allocation of funds among the 50 States. The reason it is so inequitable is because we are basically using the status quo which was based on a State's financial ability and political willingness to put up substantial amounts of money for welfare and then draw down an equivalent amount of Federal matching funds. That formula has resulted in disparities of in the range of 4 and 5 to 1 between high-benefit States and low-benefit States in the amount of funds that they have per poor person.

For instance, in the State of Arkansas, for every person in their State who has an income below the poverty level, they would get $397 of Federal support. In the State of New York, under this legislation, in the year 2000 they would get $1,961 for every person below 100 percent of poverty level. When you compound that large inequity in the amount of Federal funds per State with a common requirement that all States have to meet in terms of getting a proportion of their welfare population off welfare and into work, you have enormous differences in the impact of this legislation.

Mr. President, I am going to truncate my remarks because I know there are some amendments that have to be offered before 2 o'clock. But let me, just for my colleagues, point out that the State of Arkansas, in the year 2000, has estimated it will have to spend 49 percent of the funds which today go to provide economic support to pay for everything from school supplies to clothing to diapers to utilities, 49 percent of those funds will have to go to meet the work requirements, that is, to pay for the job training, to pay for the child care, to pay for the other support services such as job placement. That is in the State of Arkansas.

In my State, which is a middle State in terms of benefits, 36 percent of our funds would have to go to meet those requirements, whereas in New York State, only 14 percent of their combined State-Federal funds would be required in order to pay for exactly the same work assistance that Arkansas and Florida would have to provide, thus leaving a very inequitable amount left over for the fundamental economic support that this program for 60 years has been providing to indigent families in America.

So, for those three reasons—lack of clarity as to what this amendment is supposed to mean; second, the strong opposition of the States because of its lack of flexibility; and, third, the inequitable application of this cumulative sanction amendment—I offer this amendment. At the appropriate time, I will urge its support.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF STATE LEGISLATURES,
Washington, DC, July 22, 1996.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL) is committed to continuing our work with the Congress to enact comprehensive, bipartisan welfare reform legislation this year. As you consider amendments to S. 1956, state legislators offer the following positions for your consideration. We strongly believe that the final welfare reform bill must: (1) provide maximum flexibility to state and local governments; (2) preserve existing state authority and avoid preemption; (3) fund federally-mandated activities; (4) avoid cost-shifts to states; and (5) ensure that states have adequate implementation time for programs fully- or partially-devolved to the states.

State legislators want welfare reform to succeed. In order to succeed, we need adequate implementation time to craft comprehensive welfare reform that best fits the needs in our individual states. In S. 1956, both the work participation rate requirements and penalties begin in the first year of the block grant. Therefore, we strongly support Senator Bob Graham's amendment to strike the language imposing a cumulative penalty of five percent of the block grant per year on states that fail to meet the mandated work requirements. Imposing harsh and excessive penalties will only make it more difficult for states to succeed. State legislators are committed to welfare reform and have proved it through passage of numerous laws reforming their welfare systems. We have asked the federal government for flexibility to change the current system and hope for legislation to empower the states.

The Congress has challenged us to go even further, yet the current bill leaves no room for adjustment, even if a state experiences a recession, high employment or natural disaster. Despite our best effort, there may be states who cannot meet the work requirements. To add compounding financial penalties will severely restrict state efforts even further—just at the moment when they could use assistance from their federal partner. Senator Graham's amendment also allows the Secretary to reduce state penalties after assessing the individual experience of that state. We have always opposed cookie-cutter welfare reform. The current bill does not allow for the diversity of state experience in reforming the system and the timing of state legislative sessions to enact the laws necessary to change the system.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that there is a $13 billion shortfall in the cash assistance block grant to meet the work requirements. NCSL has always supported deficit reduction and we understand the limitation on available funds for work. However, the current bill as drafted penalizes us as we charter unknown waters to create a new system to retrain state workers, create employment slots, verify work slots and, of course, be successful at moving recipients to work. A distinction is not made for states who have made a good faith effort but fail to meet the requirements for reasons beyond their control. We are very concerned that this will hamper state creativity, innovation and excellence. State legislators urge you to support Senator Graham's amendment.

Sincerely,

CARL TUBBESING,
Deputy Executive Director.

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, June 26, 1996.

SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR FINANCE COMMITTEE MEMBER: The nation's Governors appreciate that S. 1795, as introduced, incorporated many of the National Governors' Association's (NGA) recommendations on welfare reform. NGA hopes that Congress will continue to look to the Governor's bipartisan efforts on a welfare reform policy and build on the lessons learned through a decade of state experimentation in welfare reform.

However, upon initial review of the Chairman's mark, NGA believes that many of the changes contained in the mark are contradictory to the NGA bipartisan agreement. The mark includes unreasonable modifications to the work requirement, and additional administrative burdens, restrictions and penalties that are unacceptable. Governors believe these changes in the Chairman's mark greatly restrict state flexibility and will result in increased, unfunded costs for states, while at the same time undermining states ability to implement effective welfare reform programs. These changes threaten the ability of Governors to provide any support for the revised welfare package, and may, in fact, result in Governors opposing the bill.

As you mark up the welfare provisions of S. 1795, the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996, NGA strongly urges you to consider the recommendations contained in the welfare reform policy adopted unanimously by the nation's Governors in February. Governors believe that these changes are needed to create a welfare reform measure that will foster independence and promote responsibility, provide adequate support for families that are engaged in work, and accord states the flexibility and resources they need to transform welfare into a transitional program leading to work.

Below is a partial list of amendments that may be offered during the committee markup and revisions included in the Chairman's mark that are either opposed or supported by NGA. This list is not meant to be exhaustive, and there may be other amendments or revisions of interest or concern to Governors that are not on this list. In the NGA welfare reform policy, the Governors did not take a position on the provisions related to benefits for immigrants, and NGA will not be making recommendations on amendments in these areas. As you markup S. 1795, NGA urges you to consider the following recommendations based on the policy statement of the nation's Governors on welfare reform.

The Governors urge to support the following amendments:

Support the amendment to permit states to count toward the work participation rate calculation those individuals who have left welfare for work for the first six months that they are in the workforce (Breaux). The Governors believe states should receive credit in the participation rate for successfully moving people off of welfare and into employment, thereby meeting one of the primary goals of welfare reform. This will also provide states with an incentive to expand their job retention efforts.

Support the amendment that applies the time limit only to cash assistance (Breaux). S. 1795 sets a sixty-month lifetime limit on any federally funded assistance under the block grant. This would prohibit states from using the block grant for important work supports such as transportation or job retention counseling after the five-year limit. Consistent with the NGA welfare reform policy, NGA urges you to support the Breaux amendment that would apply the time limit only to cash assistance.

Support the amendment to restore funding for the Social Services Block Grant (Rockefeller). This amendment would limit the cut in the Social Services Block Grant (SSBG) to 10 percent rather than 20 percent. States use a significant portion of their SSBG funds for child care for low-income families. Thus, the additional cut currently contained in S. 1795 negates much of the increase in child care funding provided under the bill.

Support technical improvements to the contingency fund (Breaux). Access to additional matching funds is critical to states during periods of economic recession. NGA supports two amendments proposed by Senator Breaux. One clarifies the language relating to maintenance of effort in the contingency fund and another modifies the fund so states that access the contingency fund during only part of the year are not penalized with a less advantageous match rate.

Support the amendment to extend the 75 percent enhanced match rate through fiscal 1997 for statewide automated child welfare information systems (SACWIS), (Chafee, Rockefeller). Although not specifically addressed in the NGA policy, this extension is important for many states that are trying to meet systems requirements that will strengthen their child welfare and child protection efforts.

Governors urge you to oppose amendments or revisions to the Chairman's mark that would limit state flexibility, create unreasonable work requirements, impose new mandates, or encroach on the ability of each state to direct resources and design a welfare reform program to meet its unique needs.

In the area of work, Governors strongly oppose any efforts to increase penalties, increase work participation rates, further restrict what activities count toward the work participation rate, or change the hours of work required. The Governor's policy included specific recommendations in these areas, many of which were subsequently incorporated into S. 1795, as introduced. The recommendations reflect a careful balancing of the goals of welfare reform, the availability of resources, and the recognition that economic and demographic circumstances differ among states. Imposing any additional limitations or modifications to the work requirement would limit state flexibility.

The Governors urge you to oppose the following amendments or revisions in the area of work:

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to increase the number of hours of work required per week to thirty-five hours in future years. NGA's recommendation that the work requirement be set at twenty-five hours was incorporated into S. 1795. Many states will set higher hourly requirements, but this flexibility will enable states to design programs that are consistent with local labor market opportunities and the availability of child care.

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to decrease to four weeks the number of weeks that job search can count as work. NGA supports the twelve weeks of job search contained in S. 1795, as introduced. Job search has proven to be effective when an individual first enters a program and also after the completion of individual work components, such as workfare or community service. A reduction to four weeks would limit state flexibility to use this cost-effective strategy to move recipients into work.

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to increase the work participation rates. NGA opposes any increase in the work participation rates above the original S. 1795 requirements. Many training and education activities that are currently counted under JOBS will not count toward the new work requirements. Consequently, states will face the challenge of transforming their current JOBS program into a program that emphasizes quick movement into the labor force. An increase in the work rates will result in increased costs to states for child care and work programs.

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to increase penalties for failure to meet the work participation requirements. The proposed amendment to increase the penalty by 5 percent for each consecutive failure to meet the work rate is unduly harsh, particularly given the stringent nature of the work requirements. Ironically, the loss of block grant funds due to penalties will make it even more difficult for a state to meet the work requirements.

Oppose the amendment requiring states to count exempt families in the work participation rate calculation (Gramm). This amendment would retain the state option to exempt families with children below age one from the work requirements but add the requirement that such families count in the denominator for purposes of determining the work participation rate. This penalizes states that grant the exemption, effectively eliminating this option. The exemption in S. 1795 is an acknowledgment that child care costs for infants are very high and that there often is a shortage of infant care.

Oppose the amendment to increase work hours by ten hours a week for families receiving subsidized child care (Gramm). This amendment would greatly increase child care costs as well as impose a higher work requirement on families with younger children, because families with other children—particularly teenagers—are less likely to need subsidized child care assistance.

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to exempt families with children below age eleven. S. 1795, as introduced, prohibits states from sanctioning families with children below age six for failure to participate in work if failure to participate was because of a lack of child care. This revision would raise the age to eleven. NGA is concerned that this revision effectively penalizes states because they still would be required to count these individuals in the denominator of the work participation rate.

The Governors urge you to oppose the following amendments or revisions in the chairman's mark in these additional areas:

Oppose the revision in the Chairman's mark to increase the maintenance-of-effort requirement above the 75 percent in the cash assistance block grant or further narrow the definition of what counts toward maintenance-of-effort.

Oppose the revisions in the Chairman's mark that increase state plan requirements and include additional state penalties.

Oppose the amendment to limit hardship exemption to 15 percent (Gramm). NGA policy supports the current provision in S. 1795, as introduced, that allows states to exempt up to 20 percent of their caseload from the five-year lifetime limit on benefits.

Oppose the amendment to mandate that states provide in-kind vouchers to families after a state or federal time limit on benefits is triggered (Breaux, Mosely-Braun). NGA believes that states should have the option to provide non-cash forms of assistance after the time limit, but they should not be mandated to do so.

Oppose the provision in the Chairman's mark to restrict the transferability of funds out of the cash assistance block grant to the child care block grant only. The governors believe that it is appropriate to allow a transfer of funds into the foster care program or the Social Services Block Grant.

Oppose a family cap mandate in the Chairman's mark. NGA supports a family cap as an option, rather than a mandate, to prohibit benefits to additional children born or conceived while the parent is on welfare.

Governors urge you to consider the above recommendations.

Sincerely,

RAYMOND C. SCHEPPACH,
Executive Director.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COUNTIES,
Washington, DC, July 12, 1996.

DEAR MEMBER OF CONGRESS: You may be voting soon on the Welfare and Medicaid reform bill (H.R. 3507/S. 1795). The National Association of Counties (NACo) is encouraged that there were improvements to the welfare section of the bill, including: increased funds for child care; maintaining current law for foster care adoption assistance maintenance and administration payments; and no funding cap for food stamps nor a block grant for child nutrition. However, there are not enough improvements to warrant our support. In some respects, particularly the work requirements, the bill has become even more burdensome. NACo particularly opposes the following welfare provisions:

1. The bill ends the entitlement of Aid to Families with Dependent Children, thereby dismantling the safety net for children and their families.

2. The eligibility restriction for legal immigrants goes too far. The most objectionable provisions include denying Supplemental Security Income and Food Stamps, particularly to older immigrants. In fact, by changing the implementation date for these provisions, the bill has become more onerous. NACo is also very concerned about the effect of the deeming requirements particularly with regard to Medicaid and children in need of protective services.

3. The participation requirements have become even more unrealistic. NACo particularly opposes the increased work participation rates and increased penalties, the changes in the hours of work required, and the new restrictions on the activities that may count toward the participation rates.

As the level of government closest to the people, local elected officials understand the importance of reforming the welfare system. While NACo is glad that the bill does contain language that requires some consultation with local officials we prefer the stronger language that is contained in the bipartisan welfare reform bill (H.R. 3266).

NACo also continues to oppose the Medicaid provisions. By capping the fiscal responsibility of the federal government and reducing the state match for the majority of the states, the bill could potentially shift billions of dollars to counties with responsibility for the uninsured. Allowing the states to determine the amount, duration and scope of services even for the remaining populations which would still be guaranteed coverage, will mean that counties will be ultimately responsible for services not covered adequately by the states. While we support the increased use of managed care and additional state and local flexibility in operating the Medicaid program, we do not support the repeal of Medicare as envisioned in the current legislation.

As it is currently written, the Medicaid and Welfare Reform bill could potentially shift costs and liabilities, create new unfunded mandates upon local governments, and penalize low income families. Such a bill, in combination with federal cuts and increased demands for services, will leave local governments with two options: cut other essential services, such as law enforcement, or raise revenues. NACo therefore urges you to vote against H.R. 3507/S. 1795.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS R. BOVIN,
President.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority manager is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I take 1 minute from our side to indicate our objection to the amendment. In the bill on page 273, there is a section that reads: "Reasonable Cause for Exception.—" And it applies to the areas the Senator from Florida is referring to.

It says:

> The Secretary may not impose a penalty on a State under subsection (a) with respect to a requirement if the Secretary determines that the State has reasonable cause for failing to comply with the requirement.

Then it has two exceptions to this, and neither of the two are matters covered by the concern of the Senator. So

I believe there is flexibility, and for those State legislators and staff up here who looked at it, I suggest they read that provision.

In addition, there is a whole process following that provision for how a State would determine that they had reasonable cause.

Having said that, I am going to yield back any time I have on the amendment.

ELECTRONIC BENEFIT TRANSFER SYSTEMS AND WELFARE REFORM

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, a number of consumer groups have expressed concern about a provision in the pending welfare reform bill that exempts users of electronic benefit transfer systems [EBT's] users from the protections of the Electronic Benefit Transfer Act.

EBT's are a useful reform to modernize the distribution of welfare benefits. They are comparable to automated teller machines. They offer a convenient way for welfare recipients to use a card to withdraw their cash benefits from a bank machine or pay for food at a grocery store. Although a few States may now have in place such a program, it is likely to become much more common in the years ahead. Massachusetts is in the process of implementing such a system for its 80,000 welfare recipients.

If the final welfare reform bill includes the exemption from consumer protections, EBT users will not have the same basic safeguards against benefit losses caused by computer error, merchant fraud, or theft that other credit card holders now have. Clearly, it is unfair to deny reasonable safeguards to welfare beneficiaries.

I understand that a realistic compromise is being developed to protect EBT users from benefit losses while ensuring that States are not exposed to unmanageable costs. I am hopeful that any welfare reform bill enacted into law will contain such protections, and I urge all Senators to support them.

TEEN PREGNANCY AND STATUTORY RAPE

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate has made progress in two areas critical to reforming welfare—teen pregnancy and statutory rape. Both sides of the aisle have worked together to bring about this progress, and I am left hopeful that we can infuse future negotiations on other welfare issues with this bipartisan spirit of cooperation.

Mindful of the American public's demand for legislative progress this year, I joined other colleagues in sponsoring initiatives that would not only benefit children, but also reduce welfare spending. Budget specialists and community leaders emphasized the necessity of dealing with two underlying welfare problems—teen pregnancy and statutory rape. In examining these problems, we answered two necessary questions: First, who is on welfare? and Second, how did they get there?

Teenage out-of-wedlock pregnancy is a primary cause of long-term welfare dependency. Currently, 53 percent of AFDC funds go to households begun by teenage births. Senator CONRAD and I proposed an amendment to last year's Senate bill which requires teen mothers to live at home or in adult-supervised settings, establishes national goals regarding education strategies and reduction of pregnancy rates, and rewards States who meet these goals with a cash bonus.

The Senate included these provisions in the bill in front of us and strengthened the Federal role in combating this problem. However, teen pregnancy prevention is a battle that must be fought at the local level, as troubled teens demand direct individual attention and investment. By accepting my amendment which compels States to devote 1 percent of their Social Security block grant—$23.8 million—to prevention services, the Senate has spurred them to assume this responsibility. We are succeeding in aiding President Clinton as he endeavors, in his own words, "to get all the leaders of all sectors of our society involved in this fight."

The Federal Government, too, recently assumed more responsibility in accepting my amendment which targets the crime of statutory rape, a direct and indirect cause of teen pregnancy. The great majority of babies born to teen mothers are fathered by adult men, and the partners of the youngest mothers under the age of 14 are on average 10 to 15 years older than them. This Senate is sending sexual predators an unequivocally stern message—that we choose abstinence for children, and that we will not tolerate those who take advantage of a child's inability to form and articulate a decision about her body. Previously, we concurred that it is the Sense of the Senate that States should aggressively enforce statutory rape laws. Now, we are taking additional steps. The amendment requires the Justice Department to pay strict attention to this crime. They are to research the link between statutory rape and teen pregnancy, as well as those predatory men who commit these crimes repeatedly. They will also educate State and local law enforcement officials to effectively prevent and prosecute statutory rape.

Again, we include the States in this fight. This amendment compels the States to create and expand criminal law enforcement, public education, and counseling initiatives and to restructure teen pregnancy prevention programs to include men. Finally, States must certify to the Federal Government that they are engaged in such activities to stop statutory rape.

By focusing on the problems of teen pregnancy and statutory rape through these amendments, we are economizing our future welfare expenditures and improving the lives of poor children. The reality of mothers sacrificing educational opportunities to give birth to fatherless babies and live in poverty is not a choice. It is partly a result of the greater problems these amendments address.

I appreciate, and the American public will appreciate our bipartisan unity in demanding responsibility from fathers. They must own up to their paternity, pay child support, and set a good example for their children by working in private sector or community service jobs. A certain group of men must refrain from sexually preying upon young girls and dispossessing them of their fundamental right to make sexual, educational, and career choices.

Problems remain in this bill. I appeal to my colleagues to work together so that we can present not just a few amendments, not just one improvement, but an entire bill to the American citizenry that truly reforms the current system.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I know Senator EXON needs some time.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank the chairman for his consideration. I will say, there are several matters that I must, as manager of the bill on this side, have very limited and short debate on, things I need to enter. I might be able to do that between now and 2 o'clock, but if not, in order to protect the interests of those I represent, I ask unanimous consent that the 2 o'clock hour be extended by 10 minutes, to 10 minutes past 2, if necessary, to accommodate the Senator from Nebraska to carry out the duties that I must address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, I do not know what it is you want to do. Do you want to offer amendments on behalf of Senators?

Mr. EXON. Yes, these are things I have to do as a manager of the bill on this side, including points of order requests.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me make one further request. Are any of those amendments for Senators who did not come today to offer their amendments? How many are those?

Mr. EXON. There are three amendments that were on the list that the Senators have not come to formally offer today, and I intend to perform that duty for them.

Mr. DOMENICI. So long as we clearly understand, this does not flow to Senators who come in here at 5 minutes after, this applies to you.

Mr. EXON. I amend the request, if I might. I ask unanimous consent that, if necessary to discharge the duties assigned to the Democratic leader of the Budget Committee, that the additional 10 minutes be assigned to this Senator and this Senator only.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend for his usual good cooperation. There are two amendments I will offer. They have been cleared on both sides. I think we can dispose of them quickly.

(C) the spouse or unmarried dependent child of an individual described in subparagraph (A) or (B).

(3) EXCEPTION FOR CHILDREN.—An alien who has not attained the age of 18 years.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am deeply concerned that for the first time in history, Congress will ban legal immigrants from most assistance programs. Banning legal immigrants from these programs will also deny their children the assistance they need to become healthy, productive members of society. The amendment I am offering will exempt children from these bans.

The Republican bill permanently bans legal immigrants from SSI and food stamps. It bans them for 5 years from Medicaid, AFDC and other programs. It also gives States the option of going even farther, and permanently banning them from Medicaid, AFDC, and social service block grants.

Several preliminary points are important to understand about this issue.

First, this bill is a ban. Banning is not the same as deeming. In deeming, we look to the sponsor for payment before the Government pays. Under banning, the sponsor is not involved. The ban covers legal immigrants, with or without sponsors.

Second, we are not talking about illegal immigrants. This bill bans legal immigrants from safety net programs. These are individuals and families who come here legally, play by the rules, and pay their taxes. They are future citizens trying to make it in this country. Yet this bill would repay them by banning them from assistance if they fall on hard times.

Third, the ban's application to children makes no sense. Many children will be affected and harmed, but many others will not. It depends entirely on where they were born. Children born in the United States are U.S. citizens and will be eligible for assistance, even if their parents are legal immigrants. But children born overseas will be caught by the ban. So children in the same family will be treated differently, depending on where they were born. This is unfair.

Fourth, the children involved often live in the families of U.S. citizens. A typical case involves a citizen who has married and brought his new spouse and the spouse's child to America. Surely, they deserve help.

AFDC, SSI, food stamps and Medicaid are programs which are especially critical to children's health and development. Banning legal immigrant children from these programs puts their well-being at stake, and it puts the public at risk, too.

Legal immigrants can get sick like everyone else. Their families can fall on hard times. They can become disabled. Banning them from basic assistance programs means that when their sponsors can't provide support, immigrants won't get the help they need. Their medical conditions will go untreated and their disabilities will worsen.

These children are future citizens. Like all other children in America, they need and deserve to be assured of good health and good nutrition. If the Federal Government abandons them, communities will suffer.

When immigrant children get sick, they infect other children. By banning them from Medicaid, we are also banning them from school-based care under the Early and Periodic Screening, Detection, and Treatment Program, which provides basic health care to school-age children. It is part of Medicaid in most states.

Under this bill, legal immigrant children will be banned from going to the school nurse when they feel sick in school. If they try to see the nurse, the nurse cannot treat them because they are immigrants. They have no private insurance and they are banned from Medicaid. If the illness gets worse, their parents may take them to the local emergency room—a very expensive alternative and not likely to be pursued unless the illness seems severe.

Suppose a child has tuberculosis. In the time it took for the illness to worsen enough to be covered by emergency Medicaid, many classmates have been exposed—all because no early help was available.

In addition to Medicaid, the Republican bill bans legal immigrant children from SSI, which provided assistance to the blind and disabled. Nine thousand legal immigrant children are blind or disabled. They have some of the most complex and life-threatening needs of all. As a practical matter, such cases often involve tragic accidents, where expensive long-term care is needed to deal with debilitating conditions. If SSI is not available, children literally will die.

The Republican bill also bans legal immigrant children from food stamps, which could sentence them to a lifetime of health problems due to poor nutrition. Parents will have to turn to soup kitchens and food pantries just to feed their children. Yet, soup kitchens are already stretched beyond their capacity. Almost all soup kitchens limit the number of times a person can come to the kitchen for food. Some kitchens allow one visit a month. Others allow only three to six visits a year. If we cut off food stamps, many legal immigrant children will have nowhere to turn for food.

Nutrition is vital to the development of a child. Immigrant children are no exception. Without access to food stamps, some immigrant children will suffer a lifetime of anemia, stunted growth, and even permanent brain damage.

Finally, it makes no sense to ban legal immigrants from AFDC payments. AFDC allows mothers to place their children in child care, so that the parent can work or go to school. Without AFDC, parents will have to stay home to take care of their children. This bill is not welfare reform for legal immigrants. It will push families further into poverty, with no chance of escape.

For all of these reasons, I urge the Senate to adopt this amendment, and reject this harsh and extreme attack on immigrant children.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield back time on the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Pursuant to section 310(d)(2), I raise a point of order against the pending Kennedy amendment on behalf of the Finance Committee.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I move to waive the point of order and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4956

(Purpose: To allow a 2-year implementation period under the Medicaid program for implementation of the attribution of sponsor's income, the 5-year ban, and other provisions)

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, I send another amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON], for Mr. KENNEDY, proposes an amendment numbered 4956.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the changes in Medicaid for legal immigrants in this legislation will have a major impact on health care institutions and on the public health.

Virtually all of the Nation's hospitals have called on Congress to delay implementation of these changes for at least 2 years because of their far-reaching consequences. Those who have urged such a transition include:

The American Association of Eye and Ear Hospitals,

The American Hospital Association,

The Association of American Medical Colleges,

The American Osteopathic Healthcare Association,

The Federation of American Health Systems, InterHealth,

The National Association of Children's Hospitals,

The National Association of Community Health Centers,

The National Association of Psychiatric Health Systems,

The National Association of Public Hospitals,

Premier, Inc.; and

The Catholic Health Association of the United States.

My amendment responds to their concern by postponing the implementation of the Medicaid changes on immigrants for 2 years, in order to enable State and local governments and hospitals and clinics to make the major adjustments required under this bill.

Even with this transition, these changes will hurt the health care system and harm the public health. It is bad public health policy to deny Medicaid to legal immigrants. Last April, the National Conference of State Legislatures, the National Association of Counties, and the National League of Cities wrote to Congress stating:

> Without this program eligibility, many legal immigrants will not have access to health care. Legal immigrants will be forced to turn to State indigent health care programs, public hospitals, and emergency rooms for assistance or avoid treatment altogether. This will in turn endanger the public health and increase the cost of providing health care to everyone.

But if these changes are to take place, then we should at least give health providers the time they need to adjust.

Although the bill continues emergency Medicaid for legal immigrants, they would be banned from regular Medicaid for 5 years. After that, they can qualify for Medicaid only if their sponsor's income and resources are too low to assist them. But States can decide to ban legal immigrants permanently from Medicaid.

Hospitals fear that if Medicaid is restricted, the loss of funds will require them to reduce services for everyone—citizens and non-citizens alike. Especially vulnerable are the most costly services, such as trauma care, burn treatment, and neonatal intensive care.

This crisis in funding will particularly affect hospitals that serve communities with large numbers of immigrants. In the case of public hospitals, most patients have Medicaid coverage. Today, at Cambridge City Hospital in Massachusetts, 48 percent of the patients are immigrants. That means the hospital could lose half of its Medicaid funding under this bill.

For Los Angeles County Hospital, the figure is 60 percent. For Jackson Memorial Hospital in Miami, 40 percent. For San Francisco General Hospital, 30 percent. For Harris County Hospital in Houston, 30 percent.

The sudden loss of Medicaid income when the immigrant population is denied coverage may well jeopardize the quality of health care in the entire community those hospitals serve.

In addition, those without health coverage through insurance or Medicaid are less likely to receive preventive medical care and timely immunization. The result is unnecessarily higher risks of disease in the community as a whole. The care system will try to prevent this result, but it is a gamble that Congress should not impose.

At a minimum, the health care system needs time to adjust. Under this bill, the Medicaid changes go into effect immediately for future immigrants. States may choose to deny Medicaid starting on January 1, 1997. That's unfair and unrealistic. Hospitals and State and local governments need time to adjust. Community health centers need to find ways to expand, as Medicaid resources dry up for hospital care. State legislatures will need to adopt new laws and adjust spending to compensate for the loss of Medicaid.

These complicated changes cannot occur overnight, especially in California, Texas, Florida, New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and other States with large immigrant populations.

These changes should not go into effect at all. But if they do, I urge my colleagues at least to hear the pleas and heed the plight of the hospitals. They need more time and they deserve it.

I urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield back time on the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, pursuant to appropriate sections of the Budget Act, I raise a point of order against the pending Kennedy amendment on behalf of the Finance Committee.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, at this point, I move to waive all points of order against the pending amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4957

(Purpose: To modify remittance requirement from 5 to 7 days for child support enforcement payments)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, since the hour of 2 is arriving and we have agreed to extra time just for Senator EXON, I send an amendment to the desk in behalf of Senator NICKLES. It was on the list. It modifies the requirement for remittance, making it 7 days instead of 5 for child support payments. I send that amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], for Mr. NICKLES, proposes an amendment numbered 4957.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 438, line 15, strike "5" and insert "7".

Mr. EXON. We have no objection to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4957) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, in 1986, the Congress enacted the so-called "Byrd rule," named for our esteemed colleague, Senator BYRD, now incorporated into the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 as section 313. Although it may seem arcane to those not immediately involved in the budget process, the Byrd rule has become a very important tool to curb provisions in the reconciliation bill that are extraneous to the purpose of deficit reduction. It helped close Pandora's box of reconciliation abuse, of which Senator BYRD so eloquently warned more than 10 years ago.

The Byrd rule provides six definitions of what constitute extraneous matter, but the term generally applies to provisions unrelated to the reconciliation deficit reduction goals.

For example, a provision in reconciliation could be challenged by a Senator if it produces no changes in revenue or spending or if such changes are merely incidental. Sixty votes are necessary to waive a point of order raised under the Byrd rule. Last year's reconciliation bill contained numerous Byrd rule violations. This year's bill is also brimming with violations. I will shortly present a full list to the Chair and raise a point of order, but I want to highlight two of them.

First, there is a provision that deletes a requirement that the Secretary of Agriculture promulgate rules so that school lunch contracts comply with the applicable meat inspection laws.

Second, there is a provision that strikes the requirement that positive efforts shall be made by service institutions to use small business and minority-owned businesses as sources of supplies and services for these school lunch programs.

Mr. President, once again, these are simply other add-ons that we should look to. Once again, this is not an all-inclusive list, but it gives the Senate a flavor of the violations that I will shortly raise.

With that, Mr. President, I send a list of provisions to the desk that I have referenced, and pursuant to section 313(d) of the Congressional Budget Act, I raise a point of order that these provisions violate section 313(b)(1) of that act.

The list follows:

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNETT). The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I inquire of the distinguished Senator, before I lodge my waiver with this, have we finished the work that you had alluded to that you had to do?

Mr. EXON. We have one other matter. It is simply something to offer into the RECORD, a letter from the President on the matter that I think you will have no objection to. Other than that, I have nothing further, after the motion that I have just made.

Mr. DOMENICI. I assume when we dispose of that, and you get your insertion, we are finished and have complied with the order about completing the work on this bill?

Mr. EXON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, since I have not had time nor has our staff had time to review the list of subject matters for Byrd rule points of order—and I want to state in a very specific way that I totally agree with the statements of the Senator from Nebraska as to why we have a Byrd rule. It is not totally perfect, but it is much better than having this law and this reconciliation without that kind of limitation. Nonetheless, we have not had a chance to review them. So what I would like to do—and I am going to do this now; I want to explain it to Senator EXON—I am going to move to waive each one and then we will reserve until tomorrow and consult with all of you on which ones we may indeed seek a vote, if any.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the request from the Senator is entirely in order. I had anticipated that they would have some time to look at the list because we have just completed it ourselves and sent it to the desk. Therefore, I have no objection to the request just made and would agree to it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to waive the Budget Act with respect to each individual point of order that has just been sent to the desk and lodged by the minority.

I might inform the Senate that, without votes on the points of order if we elect to seek waiver, there are 22 stacked votes now in the event we vote on everything that we have heretofore cleared. The starting time, according to the previous order, unless changed, will be 9:30 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter stating the administration's position on the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, July 18, 1996.

Hon. J. JAMES EXON,
Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR EXON: I am writing to transmit the Administration's views on S. 1956, the "Personal Responsibility, Work Opportunity, and Medicaid Restructuring Act of 1996."

We understand that the Senate Republican leadership plans to move to strike the Medicaid provisions of this reconciliation legislation—leaving a welfare-only bill for Senate floor consideration.

We are pleased with this decision to separate welfare reform from provisions to repeal Medicaid's guarantee of health care for the elderly, the poor, pregnant women, and people with disabilities. We hope that removing this "poison pill" from welfare reform is a breakthrough that shows that the Republican leadership seriously wants to pass bipartisan welfare reform this year.

Enacting bipartisan welfare reform reflecting the principles of work, family, and responsibility is among the Administration's highest priorities. For the past three-and-a-half years, the President has demonstrated his commitment to enacting real welfare reform by working with Congress to enact legislation that moves people from welfare to work, encourages responsibility, and protects children. The Administration sent Congress a stand-alone welfare bill that requires welfare recipients to work, imposes strict time limits on welfare, toughens child support enforcement, is fair to children, and is consistent with the President's commitment to balance the budget.

The Administration is pleased that the bill makes many of the important improvements to H.R. 4 that we recommended—improvements also included in the bipartisan National Governors' Association (NGA) and Breaux-Chafee proposals. The Senate bill improves upon the bill that the House is now considering. We urge the Senate to build on these improvements, and to continue the bipartisan spirit displayed in last year's debate on welfare reform. At the same time, however, the Administration is deeply concerned about certain provisions of S. 1956 that would adversely affect benefits for Food Stamp households and legal immigrants, as well as the need for strong State accountability and flexibility. And, the bill would still raise taxes on millions of workers by cutting the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC).

IMPROVEMENTS CONTAINED IN S. 1956

We appreciate the Finance and Agriculture Committees' efforts to strengthen provisions central to work-based reform, such as child care, and to provide additional protections for children and families. In rejecting H.R. 4, the President singled out a number of provisions that were tough on children and did too little to move people from welfare to work. S. 1956 includes important changes to these provisions that move the legislation closer to the President's vision of true welfare reform. We are particularly pleased with the following improvements:

Child Care. As the President has insisted throughout the welfare reform debate, child care is essential to move people from welfare to work. The bill reflects a better understanding of the child care resources that States will need to implement welfare reform, adding $4 billion for child care above the level in H.R. 4. The bill also recognizes that parents of school-age children need child care in order to work.

Food Stamps. The bill removes the annual spending cap on Food Stamps, preserving the program's ability to expand during periods of economic recession and help families when they are most in need. We are concerned, however, with other Food Stamp proposals, as discussed below.

Maintenance of Effort. The Administration strongly supports the Finance Committee's changes to State maintenance of effort (MOE) and transfer provisions and believes these are critical elements of bipartisan welfare reform. The Committee removed the objectionable transfer authority to the Title XX Social Services Block Grant and other programs and would allow transfers to child care only. In addition, the Committee restored the 80 percent MOE level in last year's Senate bill and tightened the definition of what counts toward this requirement.

Work Performance Bonus. We commend the Committee for giving States an incentive to move people from welfare to work by providing $1 billion in work program performance bonuses by 2003. This provision was an important element of last year's Senate bill and the Administration's bill, and will help change the culture of the welfare office.

Contingency Fund. The bill adopts the NGA recommendation to double the Contingency Fund to $2 billion, and add a more responsive trigger based on the Food Stamp caseload. Below, the Administration recommends further steps that Congress should take to strengthen this provision.

Equal Protection. The Committee includes provisions that would require States to establish objective criteria for delivery of benefits and to ensure equitable treatment. We are pleased that the Committee also incorporates appropriate State accountability measures.

Hardship Exemption. We commend the Finance Committee for following the NGA recommendation and restoring last year's Senate provisions allowing States to exempt up to 20 percent of hardship cases that reach the five-year limit.

Transitional Medicaid. We are pleased that the Finance Committee has taken steps to ensure the continuation of Medicaid coverage for some of those who are transitioning from welfare to work. We are concerned, however, that States could deny this transitional Medicaid to many who would lose cash benefits for various reasons. In addition, we still have concerned with Medicaid coverage for those on cash assistance, as noted below.

Worker Displacement. We are pleased that the bill incorporates provisions against worker displacement, including protections from partial displacement as well as avenues for displaced employees to seek redress.

Child Nutrition. The bill now includes many provisions proposed by the Administration, and no longer includes H.R. 4's provisions for a child nutrition block-grant demonstration. In addition, the bill exempts the child nutrition program from burdensome administrative provisions related to its alien provisions. We believe that the Senate could further improve the bill by including the Administration's proposed 8 percent commodity floor.

Child Protection. We commend the Finance Committee for preserving the Title IV-E foster care and adoption assistance programs (including related Medicaid coverage), and other family support and child abuse prevention efforts.

Supplemental Security Income (SSI). The bill removes the proposed two-tiered benefit system for disabled children receiving SSI, and retains full cash benefits for all eligible children.

We remain pleased that Congress has decided to include central elements of the President's approach—time limits, work requirements, the toughest possible child support enforcement, and the requirement that minor mothers live at home as a condition of assistance—in this legislation.

KEY CONCERNS WITH S. 1956

The Administration, however, remains deeply concerned that S. 1956 still lacks other important provisions that have earned bipartisan endorsement.

Size of the cuts. The welfare provisions incorporate most of the cuts in the vetoed bill—about $60 billion over six years (including the EITC and related savings in Medicaid). These cuts far exceed those proposed by the NGA or the Administration. Cuts in Food Stamps and benefits to legal immigrants are particularly deep. The President's Budget demonstrates that cuts of this size are not necessary to achieve real welfare reform, nor are they needed to balance the budget.

Food Stamps. The Administration strongly opposed the inclusion of a Food Stamp grant option, which could seriously undermine the Federal nature of the program, jeopardizing the nutrition and health of millions of children, working families, and the elderly, and eliminating the program's ability to respond to economic changes. The Administration also is concerned that the bill makes deep cuts in the Food Stamp program, including a cut in benefits to households with high shelter costs that disproportionately affects families with children, and a four-month time limit on childless adults who are willing to work but are not offered a work slot.

Legal Immigrants. The bill retains the excessively harsh and uncompromising immigration provisions of last year's vetoed bill. While we support the strengthening of requirements on the sponsors of legal immigrants applying for SSI, Food Stamps, and Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), the bill bans SSI and Food Stamps for virtually all legal immigrants, and imposes a five-year ban on most other Federal programs, including non-emergency Medicaid, for new legal immigrants. These bans would even cover legal immigrants who become disabled after entering the country, families with children, and current recipients. The bill would deny benefits to 300,000 immigrant children and would affect many more children whose parents are denied assistance. The proposal unfairly shifts costs to States with high numbers of legal immigrants. In addition, the bill requires most Federal, State, and local benefits programs to verify recipients' citizenship or alien status. These mandates would create extremely difficult and costly administrative burdens for State, local, and non-profit service providers, as well as barriers to participation for citizens. Also, the Administration urges that Senate not go in the harsh direction that the House Rules Committee did yesterday in reporting a provision that would broaden the ban on current immigrants from receiving Medicaid coverage.

Medical Assistance Guarantee. The Administration opposes provisions that do not guarantee continued Medicaid eligibility when States change AFDC rules. We are concerned that families who lose cash assistance for various reasons, such as reaching the five-year limit or having additional children while they are receiving assistance, could lose their Medicaid eligibility and be unable to receive the health care services that they need. In addition, State flexibility to change these AFDC rules could adversely affect Medicaid eligibility determinations, including eligibility for poverty-related pregnant women and children.

Protection in Economic Downturn. Although the Contingency Fund is twice what it was in the vetoed bill, it still does not allow for further expansions during poor economic conditions and periods of increased need. We are also concerned about provisions that reduce the match rate on contingency funds for States that access the fund for periods of under a year.

Resources for Work. S. 1956 would not provide the resources States need to move recipients into work. The bill increases the work mandates on States above the levels in H.R. 4 while providing no additional resources for States to meet these more stringent rates. Based on CBO estimates, the Senate bill would provide $12 billion less over six years than is required to meet the bill's work requirements and maintain the current level of cash assistance to poor families. CBO notes that "most States would be unlikely to satisfy this requirement." Moreover, the Senate bill would lead to a $2.4 billion shortfall in child care resources (assuming States maintain their current level of cash assistance benefits, continue current law Transitional and At-Risk child care levels, and do not transfer amounts from the cash block grant to child care).

Vouchers. The bill actually reduces State flexibility by prohibiting States from using block grant funds to provide vouchers to children whose parents reach the time limit. H.R. 4 contained no such prohibition, and the NGA opposes it. We strongly urge the adoption of voucher language, similar to that in the Administration's bill and Breaux-Chafee, that protects children.

Child Care Health and Safety Protections. The bill repeals current child care health and safety protections and cuts set-aside funds to the States to improve the safety and quality care. We strongly urge the Senate to restore these basic health and safety protections, which were enacted with strong bipartisan support in 1990 and maintained in last year's Senate bill and are essential to the safety and well-being of millions of young children.

Family Caps. The Senate bill reverts back to the opt-out provision on family caps which would restrict State flexibility in this area. The Administration, as well as the NGA, seeks complete State flexibility to set family cap policy.

EITC. The Administration opposes the provision in S. 1956 that raises taxes on over four million low-income adult workers by ending inflation adjustments for working households without dependent children, and thereby substantially cutting the real value of their tax credit over time. Raising taxes on these workers is wrong. In addition, the budget resolution instructs the revenue committees to cut up to $18.5 billion more from the EITC. Thus, EITC cuts could total over $20 billion. Such large tax increases on working families are particularly ill-conceived when considered in the context of real welfare reform—that is, encouraging work and making work pay.

We strongly support the bipartisan welfare reform initiatives of moderate Republicans and Democrats in both the House and Senate. The Breaux-Chafee proposal addresses many of our concerns, and it would strengthen State accountability efforts, welfare to work measures, and protections for children. It provides a foundation on which the Senate should build in order to provide more State flexibility; incentives for AFDC recipients to move from welfare to work; more parental responsibility; and protections for children. It is a good, strong proposal that would end welfare as we know it. Breaux-Chafee provides the much needed opportunity for a real bipartisan compromise, and it should be the basis for a quick agreement between the parties.

The President stands ready to work with Congress to address the outstanding concerns so we can enact a strong, bipartisan welfare reform bill to replace the current system with one that demands responsibility, strengthens families, protects children, and gives States broad flexibility and the needed resources to get the job done.

Sincerely,

JACOB J. LEW,
Acting Director.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to present to the Senate today the bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and related agencies for the fiscal year 1997. This bill provides funding for all of the activities under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, except for the U.S. Forest Service. It also funds the activities of the Food and Drug Administration, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, and pays for expenses and payments of the Farm Credit System.

This bill recommends total new budget authority of $54.3 billion. This is $9 billion less than the 1996 enacted level for these programs and these activities. It is $4 billion less than the President's fiscal year 1997 budget request. It is $1.2 billion more than the level recommended by the House.

Over 76 percent of the total to be spent under this bill will go for funding of the Nation's domestic food assistance programs. That represents $40.5 billion of this $54.3 billion bill. This is up from 63 percent of the total funding in the bill in 1996. These programs include food stamps, the national school lunch and elderly feeding programs, and the supplemental feeding program for women, infants and children.

The bill recommends total discretionary spending of $13.118 billion in budget authority and $13.409 billion in outlays for fiscal year 1997. These amounts are consistent with the allocation the subcommittee has received under the Budget Act.

Senators should also be aware these allocations are approximately $510 million in budget authority and $440 million in outlays less than what would be required under a freeze. The suggestion this year, for those who are following the budget debate, was that spending under the discretionary programs of the Federal Government ought to be held level with last year's spending. That was the goal, that was the objective. This bill meets that target and then some. There is actually a reduction in spending from the freeze level in this bill as compared with last year's or the current fiscal year's budget and appropriations levels.

We do have some parts of this bill where spending is increased. Among the discretionary spending increases recommended are an additional $12.8 million to continue the efforts of the Food Safety and Inspection Service to ensure the safety of our Nation's food supply. The level recommended for the Food Safety and Inspection Service is adequate to maintain the current inspection system and to provide the needed investments required to implement the new hazard analysis and critical control point meat and poultry inspection system. We are hopeful that by bringing this new system online we can take advantage of new technologies, new scientific advances, in the detection of those contaminants in the food supply that we would not be able to detect otherwise, and we will help ensure that we are doing everything that possibly can be done to safeguard the food supply and the consumers of food in America from harm and ill health.

In order to implement the system, the bill provides funding to fill all inspector vacancies, funding to train inspectors in the new inspection system, and funding for the annualization of fiscal year 1996 pay raises and anticipated 1997 pay raises. This demonstrates the high priority this committee places on the safety of our Nation's meat and poultry and our commitment to ensure that American consumers continue to have the safest food in the world.

Another area of emphasis in this bill is agriculture research. The bill provides $1.1 billion for funding of agriculture research. This is approximately $7.3 million below the level requested by the administration, but it is $25 million above the House-recommended level. Included in this amount is $52 million for food safety research. The committee has provided the full increase of $7.5 million requested for food safety research.

For extension activities, the bill recommends $431 million, which is $3.3 million above the fiscal year 1996 level. The Smith-Lever and Hatch Act formula funding are continued at 1996 levels. The increase recommended for extension activities will provide first-time funding for institutional capacity grants and extension work at the 29 tribally controlled colleges, or 1994 Institutions.

Farm credit programs are funded by the bill, which provides $3.1 billion in loan levels for the coming fiscal year. This is an increase of $65 million over the House-recommended level.

The bill also recognizes that efficiencies can be gained through the consolidation of programs to improve their efficiency in terms of administrative costs and paperwork and the like. So the bill consolidates funding for 14 rural development grant and loan programs into a rural community investment program. It is divided into three subprograms: housing, business cooperative assistance, and rural utilities assistance. The 1996 appropriations act created the first of these consolidations for rural utilities. The funding levels provided for all three of the programs were equal to the comparable levels requested in the budget.

On an aggregate basis, the funding levels in the bill represent an increase of $231 million more than the House-passed bill. The bill funds, as I mentioned before, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission and the Food and Drug Administration. We are trying to provide levels of funding that will enable these two agencies to do the job they are required to do by law and that will enable them to discharge their responsibilities under the law.

The bill also carries a provision to ensure the continuation of WIC Program funding and Food Stamp Act funding, as well. The bill includes a provision to amend the Food Stamp Act, to exclude electronic benefit transfer systems for the delivery of food stamp benefits from the Federal Reserve Board's "Regulation E."

There are other provisions of the bill that seek to deal with challenges in the food service area, and we hope Senators will find that we have demonstrated a sensitivity to the needs of those who cannot adequately provide for their own nutrition needs and need Government help to do it. But we also reflect in this bill changes and reforms that have been made by law to try to ensure that there is a sense of personal responsibility for one to take care of himself and his family, and that also is reflected in this legislation.

Senators may remember that, last year, when this bill was on the floor, there was a big debate over a regulation being proposed by the administration—the Food Safety and Inspection Service, specifically—dealing with when poultry products could be labeled as "fresh" or "frozen." Well, I am happy to report to the Senate that a compromise has been reached among those who were directly interested in the debate last year, so that the definition of the term "fresh," as used in labeling of raw poultry products, is reflected and included in this legislation. We hope that resolves the issue. Of course, the administration still has differences of opinion about it, and those may be heard at some point in the debate.

We think this is a responsible way of resolving that issue. There are other provisions related to legislative changes the House recommended that we deleted. The House rewrote some provisions that were included in the farm bill, and we did not go along with those House provisions. So Senators will notice that we do not provide a cap on the price of raw sugarcane, for example. We do not approve a provision relating to planting requirements under the farm bill that would be required to meet eligibility standards for a market transition payment. We revised that to make it consistent with the language of the law, the farm bill that was passed by both Houses and signed by the President. So we do not try to go in and rewrite the farm bill in this bill. We urge Senators not to try to do that with amendments.

Only 24 percent of the total funding recommended by this bill is discretionary. These have been difficult challenges for the committee to resolve, trying to determine how to allocate scarce funds that are made available to this subcommittee under the budget resolution. We hope Senators will agree that we have undertaken this and presented a bill that is done in a fair way, so that those essential activities in the Department of Agriculture that are authorized and required by law are funded. But we have tried to be responsible, and we hope Senators agree that we have. These are recommendations that we make to the Senate, which we hope will be approved.

Let me say that this bill could not have been written without the excellent cooperation and dedicated and intelligent assistance of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, the ranking Democrat on the subcommittee. He has served as chairman of this subcommittee in the past, and it has been a pleasure to work with him and the members of his staff in the development of this bill.

We had hearings all through the earlier parts of this year. We heard from all of the agencies and departments, whose budgets were reviewed by our subcommittee very carefully. We have considered the suggestions of others outside of the Congress, who have opinions to be expressed on these subjects. So we have tried to consider all of the relevant evidence and facts that ought to be considered before presenting this bill to the Senate. We hope the Senate will approve it, and we recommend that it be adopted.

We know that Senators may have amendments. If they do have amendments, we will be glad to debate them. Let me repeat the suggestion of the majority leader when he was asking consent to go to this bill today. We hope to complete action on this bill today. That means that all amendments that are going to be offered should be offered today and debated today. We will reserve any votes on those amendments, and any vote on final passage, until tomorrow. We appreciate the cooperation of Senators that will enable us to accomplish that goal.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. Has there been a unanimous-consent agreement entered that we would start back-to-back votes on welfare bill amendments in the morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At 9 o'clock, yes, that is correct.

Mr. BUMPERS. Does the consent agreement continue on what we will do after those votes and final passage on the welfare bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is reminded that it is at 9:30 that we vote and 9 o'clock that we meet. After getting rid of the list of votes, we will resume consideration of the agriculture bill.

Mr. BUMPERS. That is the reason I was asking. I hope we do not have to resume. I hope we can finish the bill this afternoon and this evening.

I am pleased to join my very able colleague, Senator COCHRAN, in bringing to the Senate floor the fiscal year 1997 appropriations bill for Agriculture, rural development, the Food and Drug Administration, and related agencies. This bill, reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, provides $54.276 billion in total obligational authority for the coming year. That is $1.224 billion more than the House provided and $4 billion below the President's request. It is within the subcommittee's 602(b) allocation. This bill is nearly $10 billion below the amount under which we are operating this year, 1996. That will be $10 billion less than in 1997. The subcommittee's discretionary allocation has again been reduced this year from $13.31 billion in budget authority for 1996 to $12.102 billion for 1997. That is a reduction in discretionary spending of $529 million dollars. Unfortunately, we have received an increase of $300 million-plus in our allocation, which gets us a little closer to last year's level, but still the bottom line is that we have less to spend again this year.

Mr. President, in all of my years on this subcommittee, the Agriculture Subcommittee, this year has been the most difficult. That causes me to, again, congratulate Senator COCHRAN for his leadership in working through these very difficult problems and crafting a bill to meets the expectations of most Senators. It meets the hard-pressed needs of rural America and, also, America's dependence on a safe supply of food and drugs.

There are still plenty of unmet needs in rural America, but, given the constraints under which we are operating, this is an excellent bill.

One item in the bill is very important to all of us, and it is greatly improved over last year's funding level. The Water and Sewer Program in the U.S. Department of Agriculture, in my opinion, is just about the very best investment we make. It improves the quality of life for all people when they have pure water and sewer systems that are safe. Last year, these programs were severely underfunded. But this year, Senator COCHRAN has been able to provide an increase that almost brings us to our budget request. That is an admirable achievement.

Let me digress to point out that people who travel around the world find that there are very few countries that you can visit where you can turn on the tap water and feel relatively safe in drinking it. As a matter of fact, I can only think of one or two right now where you can do that. The people who live in and near Washington, DC, have just recently found that not only happens in other countries but it happens right here in the United States in some of the major metropolitan areas.

In other areas, this bill provides level funding for the WIC Program—women, infants and children. Historically, this program has witnessed annual increases in funding that have actually exceeded the caseload. So we have been carrying over money in the WIC Program. This program has accumulated, and it has reduced the pressure on us to continue increasing the amount of money every year. Even considering the general budget constraints, we are within reach of full funding for WIC, a goal which I believe is shared by every Member of the U.S. Senate.

As WIC administrators work this coming year to provide nutritional assistance to women, infants, and children, I hope that next year we will finally reach the goal of full funding and the more important goal of full participation.

Last year, Congress passed and sent to the President a new farm bill. This year, when the bill was considered by the House, a number of provisions were included to change some of the underlying philosophy of the farm bill. I did not vote for the farm bill. I did not like it, and I still do not like it. But that is beside the point at this stage of the game.

Contracts that farmers all across America thought would guarantee them payments for 7 years were being reduced by the House Appropriations Committee even before the farmers got their first payment. Regardless of my views of the so-called freedom to farm payments, we need to remember that farmers are now in the middle of their growing season. Their investments are on the line, and they deserve to know what to expect and that the rules are not going to be changed in the middle of the game. The chairman has already alluded to the fact that he hopes Senators will not try to redebate that bill. In the bill before us, we have taken great pains not to amend the basic rationale for last year's farm bill.

There is one major concern I have that deserves mention. When the President's budget was presented to this subcommittee, loan authority assumptions were much too high to be met considering the small subsidy provided. Mr. President, let me just explain that.

Every loan program is scored by OMB and the Congressional Budget Office as to how much money you have to assume you are going to lose. If you are going to loan $1 million, you have to put some amount in there for what the banks would call reserve for loan losses. That is called the subsidy rate. The subsidy rate in this bill as provided by the administration, in my opinion, is much too small to fund the authority of loans set out in all of these different Federal programs. In my opinion, we are not going to be able to loan as much unless we have a supplemental appropriation sometime next spring to raise that subsidy level.

We are including in the managers' package an amendment that will allow the Secretary to transfer excess WIC funds to meet the needs of loan programs such as those tied to water and sewer programs in rural housing.

Mr. President, before anybody thinks that is cruel and taking money from women, infants and children to fund a subsidy rate for water and sewer programs, bear in mind that this is money not used by WIC. This is similar to an amendment I offered last year that provided an additional $36 million in the Water and Sewer Program with no detrimental effect to the WIC participation. This amendment will help, but it probably will not provide enough additional budget authority to achieve full program levels. That is the reason I mention additions to the subsidy in some supplemental appropriations next spring.

I hope in future budget submissions, the administration will take greater care to make sure that rising interest rates or other economic conditions do not provide falsely optimistic assumptions of what may be the reality on the first day of the following fiscal year.

I also want to mention an issue which I raised during subcommittee consideration of this bill related to an

FDA proposal to require certain labeling requirements for prescription drugs—the so-called med-guide rule.

Let me digress just a moment to say that—this is a little personal—I recently had an illness. I went to the drugstore to get four different medications. I have studiously avoided taking aspirin all of my life. I hate medicine. I do not like to take it. But in this case it was required. For the first time in my life, the pharmacist with each of the four prescriptions handed me a rather detailed description of the medicine—what it was designed to do, contraindications to look for, any reactions that you might have. I read it very carefully. It is the first time I had ever gotten anything like that.

As it turned out, I was allergic to one of the drugs, which caused me to have a fever, a rash, and I had to quit taking it. But the informational sheet that the pharmacist gave me had pointed out that that very thing might happen.

That is good information. It is the information that the pharmaceutical-buying public is entitled to. I understand—and I agree with the concerns of the Food and Drug Administration—that consumers need to be provided with this information.

As I pointed out, some pharmacies are already doing it on a voluntary basis. Of course, they are getting their information from the pharmaceutical manufacturers of those drugs. But all pharmacies are not doing this now. In some cases, the information is not totally accurate or complete.

So in the full committee, I offered report language that will help relieve some of the concerns that Commissioner Kessler expressed to me about the statutory language contained in this bill. I understand the House has similar language but of a nature more to the liking of the commission. In my report, language is designed to give FDA assurances that the information to be provided to consumers will be appropriately crafted and higher rates of participation by pharmacies will be obtained.

Mr. President, that concludes my remarks. Again, I want to congratulate my good friend and colleague, Senator COCHRAN and his able staff in drafting the bill now before us.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. COCHRAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Arkansas for his kind remarks and again repeat my expression of appreciation for his hard work and his good assistance in the preparation of this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments which are at the desk to H.R. 3603 be considered and agreed to en bloc; that no points of order be waived thereon; that the measure, as amended, be considered as original text for the purpose of further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I know that some Senators are considering amendments. One Senator has just come to the floor—Senator GREGG of New Hampshire—who wanted to give the Senate notice that he intended to offer an amendment on a subject. Maybe, if he can tell us when he wants to do that, we can reach some agreement as to the time. I know there are a couple of other Senators who have asked that they be permitted to offer amendments early in the consideration of the bill. Senator MCCAIN is one, and there may be others.

So we are ready to accept the suggestions of Senators for changes in the bill. I would be happy to yield to my friend from New Hampshire if he would like to respond to my inquiry.

Mr. GREGG. I am happy to respond to the inquiry of the Senator from Mississippi. I would like to offer my amendment when it is convenient to the Senator from Mississippi.

I ask if he would ask unanimous consent that no second-degree amendments be offered to my amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I can say that we have gotten notice—and maybe the Senator from Arkansas has heard of this—from one Senator on this side of the aisle who asked that no unanimous-consent agreement be made on any amendment relating to the issue of sugar.

Having heard that—I do not know whether the Senator has heard that or not—I do not know of any objection to any agreements on this side of the aisle on that subject. We have not heard of any. My thought would be if the Senator has an amendment to simply go ahead and offer it and let us see what happens. If Senators want to debate it, they can come and debate it.

Mr. GREGG. In a prior discussion with the Senator from Mississippi, it was my understanding this was going to be subject to a time limitation of 40 minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have no objection to that. I have heard there may be an objection on the other side of the aisle. There is no objection on this side.

Mr. BUMPERS. There will be an objection, I say to the Senator from Mississippi, on this side.

Mr. GREGG. I guess if I had known that I would not have foreclosed my rights on other parts of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Senator has all of his rights. There are no rights of his whatsoever that have been extinguished in any way or diminished in any way.

Mr. GREGG. There are a few that have been extinguished and diminished, I point out to the Senator, in allowing——

Mr. COCHRAN. The committee amendments to be adopted.

Mr. GREGG. The committee amendments to go forward. It was my understanding that committee amendments would go forward because I was going to be given a specific time and time limit. That does not appear to be the case. I find that to be inconsistent with the understanding I had. And I guess I just have to accept the fact things happen that way around here.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. If I may just in a general colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the committee say that normally when we have a series of amendments to be offered on a bill like this, we sort of go back and forth between the Democratic side and the Republican side. I would suggest that that is fine if you have the Republicans and Democrats waiting to offer amendments, but that very seldom happens on this bill. And if there are three Republicans and no Democrats in the Chamber waiting to offer amendments, then I suggest we take them and not sit around waiting for somebody on the other side to come and offer amendments in order to accommodate a protocol we have used in the past.

Would the Senator agree with that?

Mr. COCHRAN. I certainly agree with the Senator. We want to complete action on all the amendments. The majority leader wanted to have votes on whatever amendments have to be voted on tomorrow and final passage tomorrow. To do that we are going to have to move along because I have seen a list of amendments that we have heard may be offered, and there are some 20 on that list. So in order to expedite the handling of those amendments, I agree with the Senator that we should move along. We would like for Senators to come now to the floor and start offering these amendments so we could dispose of them.

Mr. BUMPERS. I noticed that the Senator and I each have an amendment which I think have been agreed to. The Senator has one to provide for electronic warehouse receipts, is that correct? Could we dispose of that one now?

Mr. COCHRAN. Senator PRESSLER was going to offer that. We could offer it for him, but if he wants to be here and offer that amendment, we will give him an opportunity to do so.

Mr. BUMPERS. All right.

Mr. COCHRAN. Maybe we will let him know he should come and offer that amendment if it is convenient at this time for him. We are actually waiting on some language before we could offer that. The Senator could go ahead and proceed to offer his amendment, if he would like.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, we are scratching through here trying to find this amendment. Until we can find it, let me suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislate bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4958

(Purpose: To transfer $50,000 from CSREES research and education to extension activities)

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and I ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] proposes an amendment numbered 4958.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 12, line 25, strike "$46,068,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$46,018,000".

On page 14, line 10, strike "$418,358,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$418,308,000".

On page 17, line 8, strike "$11,331,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$11,381,000".

On page 17, line 8, strike "$431,072,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$431,122,000".

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, this amendment would reduce the total recommended for special research grants under research and education activities of the Cooperative State Research, Education, and Extension Service by $50,000 and increase the amount recommended for Federal administration under extension activities of the service by the same amount.

The amendment would affect only funds recommended for research and extension work in Mississippi. It would create a new grant under Federal administration for an extension specialist in Mississippi of $50,000 to cover an unfunded requirement which was just brought to my attention. To offset this additional funding, the amount recommended for aquaculture research in Mississippi would be reduced from the $642,000 to $592,000, eliminating the additional funds recommended to enable the National Center for Physical Acoustics to provide additional support to the National Warmwater Aquaculture Center.

Mr. President, we have shown this amendment to the other side, and we understand there is no objection.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, that amendment is acceptable to this side. Has it been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been agreed to.

Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4958) was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BUMPERS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, since it is 3 o'clock, this being the time I was advised to bring this amendment to the floor and at that time there was to be a time agreement, which appears now will not occur, I thought I would discuss my amendment and point out some of the problems with the sugar program and then make a decision later on as to whether or not I will offer it in this context or not. But essentially what this amendment deals with is the sugar program.

For those who may be following this debate in some other venue other than this floor, because I know everybody who is a Member of the Senate understands the sugar program, the sugar program is the last vestige of gross corporate welfare in the farm community.

In the farm bill that was just recently passed, there was a major initiative undertaken to try to put the farm community generally on a more market-oriented approach, although some arguments might claim it is even less market oriented. At least it was an attempt to have some forces brought to bear on what farmers would plant, how much they would plant of a certain commodity which would be something other than a decision made by a Government leader. It would be the marketplace.

However, there still exists this sugar program which has just the opposite approach toward financing and growing and creating of sugar in this country. The sugar program, as it is basically structured today, is a classic, what can best be defined as a Marxist system of economics. Essentially, the Government sets a price for a commodity which far exceeds what the marketplace would set for that commodity were the marketplace allowed to work in its ordinary fashion, and then it requires the consumer to pay that price no matter what the consumer's interest may be. As a result, the growers of that product grow it, make a great deal of money and have no relationship between what they grow and what the market wants or what they grow and what the market wishes to pay. It is a classic definition of Marxism.

In fact, this program is so outrageous that it costs the American consumer approximately $1.4 billion a year of subsidies to a very small cadre of very influential sugar growers. In fact, I think the number I saw was something like less than 70 sugar growers obtaining a huge percentage of the income from this program.

This subsidy is a function of the fact that it costs about 23 cents a pound for sugar in the United States, whereas on the world market, it costs about 13 cents a pound for sugar. Think about that for a minute. It is hard to believe that an American product would cost American consumers twice what the world market is. You might expect that in the old Soviet Union. You might even expect it in Cuba today. But in the United States, for somebody to be paying twice the cost of a product that is paid by people in other countries for that same product when that product is fully fungible around the world is incomprehensible. It just runs against the whole concept of a market economy, of an American system, what the United States theoretically stands for in the international community, what we stood for years against the Soviet system and what has theoretically, at least, won the debate of international economics—something called market forces.

If a commodity costs 10 cents or 13 cents in Brazil, or let's take a more industrialized state—although Brazil is a very industrialized state—say, Spain, Japan, or France, and that commodity, that item you want to buy costs 13 cents, in this case that is called a pound of sugar—if you wanted to make some chocolate chip cookies maybe or a cake—and in the United States, it costs 23 cents, you would say, "Well, that can't be, that can't be. Why would that be?"

Why, in a country that professes a free-market approach to economics, an international world free market, would one commodity that we grow in the United States that is grown around the world and moves from country to country with fair ease, why would that commodity cost 10 cents more in the United States per pound than it does in some other reasonably industrialized nation?

The reason is because the influence of the people who make all the money on this product is so great that they are able to set up a system which benefits a few at the cost of many. It is pretty much the last surviving system of this type of productivity in our country in the farm program area. There is still some of this, obviously, in the peanut area, and to a slighter degree, you can argue in the dairy area, but a much slighter degree. But clearly, sugar is unique in having this level of perversion of the marketplace for the benefit of a few at the expense of the many, at the rather significant expense, $1.4 billion of expense.

You might think that people who would be getting a $1.4 billion extra price for their product beyond what the market usually bears or would reasonably bear, would think that they were satisfied, but that is not the case here. I suppose greed feeds on greed, and it is inevitable, if you have proven that you can be really greedy and successful, you can get even greedier.

So this group of great troughers—by troughers, I mean porker, corporate pork—this group of magnificent troughers—these folks would win just about any contest at any country fair in the pork-producing category—decided that not only do they have to have a price that is almost twice the world price for the product, which the American consumer has to pay, they do not even want to have to pay off—when they borrow from the Federal Government to produce that product, should they by some unbelievable process lose money, they do not even want to pay it off.

Not only do they want a product that is priced at twice what it is worth, but should they actually lose money producing a product that is priced twice what it is worth—it is hard to believe they might lose money—but should they lose money, they do not even want to have to pay it off. They have something called the Nonrecourse Loan Program. This is almost beyond belief. It is so egregious in its attack on all sensibility relative to the marketplace—a nonrecourse loan.

If you are a student in the United States and you find yourself going to a school that costs you more than you can afford to pay from the summer job you have been working for the last 5 or 6 years, and it costs more than your parents can afford to pay because they cannot simply scrape together enough, because a college education has become so expensive, if you are a student and you borrow $1,500, $2,000 from the Federal Government, and you cannot pay it back, does the Federal Government say, "That's OK, forget it, you don't have to worry about it"? No. The Federal Government requires you to pay it back. We do not do a very good job of collecting it. I admit that. We have to change our collection system. But to those people who are honest and sincere—that is the majority of our American students—they have to pay their loans back.

But not the sugar industry. No. The sugar industry, after ripping the American public off, after the $1.4 billion a year, after being the biggest porkers in America, they do not even want to pay back their loans.

If you are a veteran, and you get a VA loan, have served this country—maybe you have even given blood for this country, maybe you are even a wounded veteran—and you get a VA loan, and you find that you cannot pay that loan back, does the American Government say, "OK. OK. Forget it. We won't collect that debt"? No. It does not. It duns your VA benefits, probably garnishees them, takes them as payment even though you may not be able to afford it because you may have other expenses at that time.

But do we say that to the sugar producers in this country? No. We do not. To the sugar producers, we say, because they have the power to demand it, "If you don't want to pay your loans back, tens of millions of dollars of loans back, it's OK. Forget it. That's all right. The American taxpayers are already paying $1.4 billion to your industry. Why not pay a little bit more through a nonrecourse-loan process?"

If you happen to be a homeowner who borrows money through the HUD program, and you have your first home, and something goes wrong with your family finances, and the Government comes in and takes your home—which might be similar to a recourse loan—does the Government stop there, to the nonrecourse loan? No. It does not. No. It does not. If there is a debt above the obligation that is available through the repossession of your home, the Government has the right—may not exercise it—but it has the right to collect that extra debt from your wages.

So if you own a home, and through some real tragedy or some unfortunate situation your home is taken from you as a result of your not being able to pay back that debt—and it is a Government loan—the Government has the right to sell the home, and to the extent that the price of that home, as sold, does not cover the cost of your loan, and you personally are liable, you personally, you, John or Mary Jones, working down at the pizza store or working on an assembly line in Detroit or working at a computer shop in New Hampshire, you are personally liable for that loan.

Is the sugar producer—even though his or her company may have borrowed millions of dollars—are they liable for that loan? No. They are not. No. They are not. It really is hard to believe that that would be the case in this economy, in this structure we would have that sort of situation. But that is the way it is. That is the way it is structured, as unbelievable as it may seem.

I guess it survives because of the fact that it has what is known as logrolling. "You scratch my back; I'll scratch your back." There are enough people producing this product in the country, although many of them are not very large compared to the big guys, that they all feel they have to protect the program and, therefore, everybody helps everybody else out. But it is pretty hard to defend this program under any sort of—you do not have to look through a magnifying glass to defend this, to look at this program, and see it is an outrage. You can take this glass of water, and put this on top of the program, and you would see that this program is just an unbelievable outrage on the body politic of the American consumer, and $1.4 billion a year in the process.

Nonrecourse loans. Just imagine it. If you are a student you have to pay your loan back. If you are a homeowner, you have to pay your loan back. If you are a veteran who served this country, you have to pay your loan back. Even if it is only $1,000, you have to pay it back.

If you are a sugar grower, processor, you do not have to pay it back. You do not have to pay it back. That is after you made the price of the product twice what it is worth. Pretty outrageous. "Sweetheart deal" I think is the term that most appropriately comes to mind. Corporate pork would be an understatement.

There is some logic, I suppose, to say that small farmers need to be protected. Maybe you will hear small farmer stories. Well, maybe small farmers do need to be protected. And to the extent we have good stories about small farmers, I suspect there will be some nice sad stories told. But the fact is that the amendment I am going to offer is not going to affect any small farmers. It is going to affect farmers of over $10 million in sales. And that is not a small farm. This is not a small farm in New England, not small anyplace. And $10 million is a good many sales. So small farm stories are not applicable to this issue at this time, although certainly they will be raised.

This issue, the issue of the sugar program, has been brought up on a number of occasions in this body. It has always been defeated. Any attempt to address the sugar program has been defeated. It was defeated last year even in the midst of major rewriting of the farm programs generally, as I mentioned earlier. Defeated a couple of years ago. It has always lost, but usually the amendments have been directed at substantive reform of the pricing mechanism. You know, this fact that you, the consumers, are paying 23 cents for a pound of sugar when your neighbors, maybe relatives in Canada, are paying 13 cents.

So that has been the usual target of the amendments. That has been soundly defeated because the influences I mentioned of so many different groups growing this product around the country is so pervasive. So my amendment—which the recourse issue does not take on that core issue of pricing policy, although pricing policy certainly should be addressed. And I would be happy to do it if I thought I had a chance of being successful. But I know I do not. My amendment takes on the issue of recourse.

As a practical matter nobody in this body should object to this, because, as I mentioned, the price of the product has been made so high that how can you object to the concept of having to pay back your loans when you are already getting such a huge subsidized price? Then if you compare the fact that you are requiring people to pay back their loans who are fairly large businesses—$10 million in sales—well, that is not too outrageous, not too outrageous, to require them to pay back their loans.

So I am talking about really a peripheral amendment here. I have to admit to that. I wish it was more at the heart of the sugar program. I wish it went to the pricing mechanism. But you know, I accept reality. I cannot win that one. I got 35 votes last year, probably about the same this year. So what this amendment does—I hope my fellow Members of the Senate will take a look at it who voted against affecting the pricing mechanism. It does not address that. So all the sugar beet growers and all the sugarcane growers are still going to get their 23 cents a pound out of the American consumer. They are going to get their pound of sugar out of the American consumer.

What they should not get, however, is this nonrecourse treatment that we do not give to students, we do not give to homeowners, we do not give to veterans. I mean, let us have some decency around here. Let us admit that we will let them go to the trough and maybe eat everything in it, but let us not let them eat the trough, too. It is getting a little outrageous.

So that is the purpose of this amendment. And I regret that the context of offering this amendment puts me in a difficult position, because I understand that I am not going to be protected on second-degrees, and I understand I am not going to be protected on time. I will say this, however, that I do think this is an important issue to vote on, that we will vote on this issue, I hope, before we complete this bill. I have no desire to delay this bill.

I know the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Arkansas have worked hard to move this bill quickly, and they have done a superb job of getting it out of committee. On the general farm programs, they have done an extraordinary job of funding those in, I think, a responsible way. This program, really, is independent of that effort. They have done an excellent job on this bill. I do not want to delay it. I want the bill to get through as soon as it can.

I do think this has to be voted on. I hope when I send this amendment to the desk, it will not be subject to a second-degree amendment. It can be couched in a variety of terms, so obviously we can return to this issue if it is, ad nauseam.

AMENDMENT NO. 4959

(Purpose: To prohibit the use of funds to make loans to large processors of sugarcane and sugar beets unless the loans require the processors to repay the full amount of the loans, plus interest)

Mr. GREGG. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GREGG] proposes an amendment numbered 4959.

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. . REPAYMENT OF CERTAIN SUGAR LOANS.

None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act may be used to make a loan to a processor of sugarcane or sugar beets, or both, who has an annual revenue that exceeds $10 million, unless the terms of the loan require the processor to repay the full amount of the loan, plus interest.

Mr. GREGG. I thank the clerk for reading the amendment. I did want the whole amendment read so it would be understood. It is an amendment which on its face says, as I stated, if somebody is going to borrow from the Federal Government, even when they are getting twice the price for their product they should be getting, if somebody is going to borrow from the Federal Government, they ought to pay the Federal Government back.

Now, some will claim they can take the sugar and then the Federal Government can sell the sugar. That is true, but if there is a difference, the Federal Government eats the difference. There is no reason the Federal Government should be put at that risk. They are not put at risk for students, veterans or homeowners, so we should not be put at that risk for sugar growers simply because they have the capacity to protect themselves in the legislative arena better than students, homeowners or veterans.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is now a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I was listening attentively to the Senator describe his amendment dealing with the issue of sugar. He finished by talking about sugar growers. Of course, the Senator understands that no one grows sugar; they grow sugar beets, to be sure, and the beets are processed into sugar.

The issue as presented by my colleague is an interesting issue and an important issue. This morning in North Dakota and elsewhere in the country, some folks got up and ate breakfast early. These were families with a full day's work to do. They need to keep their machinery in order, tend to their land, look over their sugar beet crops. Farmers work pretty hard. They invest a fair amount of money into a farmstead and try to make a living.

One of the circumstances we find in the farm programs is that there are difficult times for people who are out there living. There are difficult times for those trying to make a living because there is so much uncertainty. You can plant, and in no time at all through a whole series of things over which you have no control, you see everything gone. Acts of nature, a whole range of circumstances can conspire to wipe you out completely and quickly.

For that reason, the Federal Government has had a farm program. The Federal Government has said we believe there ought to be a network of family farmers in this country who have an opportunity to make it. So for a whole series of farmers raising crops, we have tried to create a safety net.

Now, within that farm program is a sugar program. The sugar program tries to provide a safety net for those folks, particularly in my part of the country, who raise sugar beets. As I listen to this debate, it is interesting how this issue is described because the description is so at odds with what the reality is.

I hear people stand on the floor of the Senate and talk about 10 cents being the world price for sugar. Well, that is not a legitimate free-market price for sugar. That is the dump price for sugar. People who study this issue understand that most sugar is traded country to country through long-term contracts. Only the residual sugar produced over that is dumped on the open market, at dump prices, dirt-cheap prices, and then some people say that is the true market price. Nonsense. That is not the true market price. It has nothing to do with a true free market price. It is a dump price for residual sugar supplies above that which is needed and above that which is traded country to country.

In this country, we have developed a program that provides loans. Those loans, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, cannot be made directly to sugar cane and sugar beet growers because sugarcane and sugar beets are not storable commodities. So the loans are made to the raw cane farmers and the beet sugar processors. I must point out, in North Dakota, those processors are by and large cooperatives. Those cooperatives are owned by the growers. The growers are the farmers.

The fact is I am proud of what has happened under this sugar program. I am proud because we have a circumstance where one part of this farm program, at least, works well and works to provide some stability in price to the beet growers—yes, in North Dakota and other parts of the country.

Now, that stability has given them an opportunity to make a living out there on the land. This is not, as some would suggest, some giant giveaway program. It is not a program that will require people at the grocery store to pay an extraordinarily high price for sugar. That is not what the program is about.

This program happens to be one of the programs that I think is good for both the producer and the consumer. It is especially good for those consumers who care about whether producers are able to live on a family farm, who understand that this matters to our country. I think it does matter to our country. It is good not only for those objectives, but it is also good for the general consumer.

You go back some years and evaluate what happened in this country when we had a shortage of sugar, and sugar prices jumped up, skyrocketed at the grocery store counter. Then there was a lot of concern about what this meant to the consumer. Well, the consumer, then, had to pay more for sugar because we had uncertain supplies, unstable supplies.

What the sugar program has done is merge two different approaches. One side of the approach says that we will try to provide something that gives some price stability to those who raise beets. The other side of the approach says that we are going to provide an advantage to the consumer who will have price stability on the grocery store shelf.

Is that price stability higher than it might be if, during years of world surpluses, we could have accessed the cheapest possible dump price for sugar? Sure. But is that price lower than it would be in times of shortage because we have a more stable capability in this country of providing for those needs? Yes. My point is this kind of program advantages both the producer, the family farmer being the producer, and also the consumer.

We have fought this battle before. We have had those persons who feel strongly about it come to the floor and say this is a program completely without merit. They say that it is a program that ought to be abolished, and they have tried to abolish it in a dozen different ways.

I must admit this amendment is a crafty technique, I say to my colleague, to try to essentially obliterate the sugar program. However, Congress has reviewed this and Congress has said this program makes sense. This program is not costing the taxpayers money. It is a program that has worked well. It is a program that has achieved its objectives of trying to provide some stability and some help for the family farmers out there, who in my part of the country raise sugar beets. It is a program also that has the ancillary benefits of helping the consumers in this country with some price stability.

Let me mention one other thing. As all of us know, in this debate there are competing forces. There is a force out there in our country—maybe I should not name it—that uses a great deal of sugar. The companies that make candy bars and other things use a great amount of sugar, and they very much want to see the dump price of sugar prevail for a while in this country as the U.S. price. I understand that. I suppose if that were my business, I would be arguing for the same thing. But that happens to be, in my judgment, a selfish position, looking after only their own interests.

But there are other considerations. The Senate and the House have gone through this and debated to try to determine where the reconciliation is here. We have tried to discover how we do this the right way, and is there a need to provide some stability in the price of these commodities. Is there a reason to give a hard working family farmer an opportunity to take advantage of that stability? The answer has been yes. Do we want that level of stability to be something that is so artificially high that it injures others that are involved in other businesses? The answer to that is no. That is what the compromise has been.

This compromise has been worked and reworked. I must say that I compliment the Senator from Mississippi, Senator COCHRAN, and so many others. Let me compliment someone who is leaving this Congress—Congressman KIKA DE LA GARZA. This is his last year in Congress. But those who understand the sugar program, especially in modern days, and its genesis, understand that KIKA DE LA GARZA has played a large role in shaping it. Republicans and Democrats have thought this through to determine what is the best public policy here. They have, I think, come to a reasonable position of supporting the provisions that are now in law, provisions that I think make sense for this country.

On a broader question, one can always, it seems to me, on almost every issue, come to the floor of the Senate and argue some kind of global construct that persuades us that there is a cheaper price somewhere. You can always find a price or position, in some nook or cranny of the economy, that you can access and that somehow would be beneficial for the country. I do not think that is what we are searching for. I think what we are searching for is public policy, especially in the area of commodities, that represents this country's interests.

Part of this country's interests lie in trying to maintain a network of family farms in our country. I am proud to tell you that at least North Dakota, one of the most agricultural States, has a network of family farms. The Red River Valley contains a network of those family farms that are trying to raise sugar beets. They have come together in cooperatives that process the sugar beets and have been quite successful. I commend them for it. I only wish that our farm programs for other commodities were as successful as this program is.

It seems to me that it ill-behooves this Congress to take a look at what works and take that apart and stop it, as opposed to evaluating what does not work and seeing if we cannot fix it. It really does not serve our interests to start deciding that those things that do function well are things that we ought to try to mess up in one way or the other.

So I very much admire the Senator who is the author of this amendment. We have worked together on many things, and will again, but he is dead wrong, in my judgment, on the sugar program. It is not new to him. He has been dead wrong on it for some long while. I know he feels strongly about it. We have a fundamental disagreement. I do hope that the Senate recognizes the balance that has been struck. I think it is good for producers and good for consumers.

It is a balance that augurs for this kind of a program to try to help family farmers in our country. I hope the Senate will, at the appropriate time, reject the amendment offered by Senator GREGG.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CRAIG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I come to the floor this afternoon, once again, to find myself in opposition to my colleague from New Hampshire on an issue that we both feel very strongly about. So for the next few moments let me say to my colleague from New Hampshire that while I disagree with him on this issue—and we very clearly disagree—we remain good friends and working partners on a lot of other issues. I must look at his amendment and what he has said about his amendment in relation to the sugar program in the new farm bill and take issue with it on an item-by-item basis, as I think is necessary. It is important for the record, so that the facts of this issue come forward.

Mr. President, when I first came to Congress in 1980, I came from a farming and ranching background, and for the 1980's, I remained actively involved with my family in farming and ranching. But I must say that my family never was involved in raising program crops. So I, frankly, did not know a lot about farm programs. I did not know a great deal about farm programs and program crops. It was not until I became a Congressman, representing the First Congressional District of Idaho, that I found it necessary to look at these programs on a program-by-program basis, Mr. President, and try to understand what they were all about.

My colleague from New Hampshire and I are pretty much alike. We are fiscal conservatives. We tend to be free marketers. And so when I began to look at the sugar program, I saw something that I had heretofore not understood. One of the first things I found out about it was that no check went to the farmer. The farmer, whether he be a cane grower or a sugar beet raiser, never received a check from the Federal Government. They received their payment from the sugar processor, who they were contracted with to raise the beets, or to raise the cane. So there was no, if you will, direct subsidy to the farmer, direct check to the farmer, as is true in other program crops.

One of the reasons this program had been developed, in a way, in that nature was because both the plant itself, the sugar beet, and the beet itself, in storage, are quite perishable. Because it was a nonrecourse loan program, it would not have been wise for the Federal Government, in this instance, to produce a loan when there was no collateral. And so as a method of even marketing into the system, it became the sugar processor who was the individual who took loans out from the Government inside a Government program, a sugar program, and they used, as collateral, refined sugar. So there was no direct payment to the farmer.

So the Senator from New Hampshire is wrong today. We will not hear a story about the plight of the small farmer. The small farmer, in this case the sugar beet raiser, whether it is in North Dakota or whether it is in Idaho, does not receive a check from the Federal Government. They receive a stable price for their product from a refiner that is engaged in a nonrecourse loan program with the Federal Government, which allows that refiner to market sugar into the market in a stable way.

So I am sorry that I will disappoint my colleague from New Hampshire. No story about the plight of the small farmer. Although I am very much concerned about the small farmer, I will tell my colleague from New Hampshire, with the hundreds of thousands of acres of sugar beets in Idaho, it is a good and profitable crop. One of the reasons it is is not because they get a check from the Government, but because the industry, through the program, is allowed to develop a loan relationship with the Federal Government, which creates stability in the marketplace. Therefore, it affords a stable price for the crop, and that creates stability at the farm itself. That is a point that I think is very important to remember.

So, in essence, the amendment that my colleague from New Hampshire is offering today, which is a cap, if you will—or it says loans are limited to those under $10 million—there is not a refiner in the market that grosses less than $10 million. So the amendment, for all intents and purposes, destroys the sugar program as we know it.

The second point, this is not just a refinement of the existing program. This is a killer amendment of a program that we spent over 12 months negotiating about with the industry and the growers associations. The reason we did that is because I, along with my colleague from New Hampshire, said it was time to reform the farm bill and get Government out of agriculture as much as we could. As a result of that, we put major reforms into the sugar program.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield for a moment on that point?

Mr. CRAIG. Yes.

Mr. DORGAN. The Senator talked about family farmers. I want to try to understand the point he made.

The point, as I understand it, is not that this does not help family farmers. This ultimately does help family farmers. But it helps family farmers through price stability—not a Government check. I think that is the point the Senator from Idaho was making.

The reason I asked the question is that I was making the point that this matters to a lot of family farmers. It matters because if you destroy this program you destroy their price stability; and, frankly, a lot of them will not be farming anymore. But this is not a Government check to those farmers. As the Senator from Idaho properly said, it helps the processors to provide price stability for farmers, which is exactly what makes this a successful program and one that does not cost the taxpayers' money.

I appreciate very much the Senator yielding.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, so the point I think that my colleague and I are trying to make here is that, if there is a role for Government in agriculture—I think there is one, and I think it ought to be a very limited one—I see it in one of two or three areas. That is not to directly prop up or to subsidize a producer who has to produce to a market but allowing Government to help facilitate at no cost to the taxpayers anomalies within a market environment that only the Government can maybe help in because of their scope and their size, or in an instance where there is direct competition from foreign markets in which cheap product is produced either because of "near slave labor" or because of subsidized Government programs in other producing areas of the world than the necessity of a relationship there where our Government can facilitate without it being a cost to the taxpayer.

In all of those instances the sugar program meets those tests. In the area of trade, where you have real political consideration and political powers vying against each other that distort the marketplace, I believe our Government can be a facilitator to production agriculture, and it works in this instance. And it works so to create stability in the marketplace. When you create stability in the marketplace you benefit the small farmer producer, and you do in real terms because you do not have the kind of gyrations in the market where one year wheat is worth a great deal of money and the next year you ought to plow it under because it is worth no money. That is the kind of instability we saw in the sugar program in the late 1970's and the early 1980's.

Those are some of the issues and items that I learned, Mr. President, when I got here as a freshman Congressman and I knew very little about sugar. I also learned something else: That when we began to make reforms in the program starting back in 1980 when we found out that we could not operate under the kind of program we were living under, and because of the boom and bust in the marketplace, with the tremendous influence of dumping raw cheap foreign sugar on our market we came back to a Government program, or at least a program where the Government became a participant to facilitate.

When we did that we said something very important. We said that this ought not be a subsidy—that it ought to be no net cost to the taxpayer.

Since 1980 my colleague from New Hampshire knows as well as I do that this has been a no net cost to the taxpayer because that is what the law says. And in that context, while I was listening to my colleague a few moments ago, I became frustrated when he began to insinuate that this was costing the taxpayer money—or that in fact it was costing the Government money—that is a nonrecourse loan if defaulted upon costs the taxpayer money.

Two years ago, when we did have some default because the loans were collateralized on refined sugar, the Government took the sugar, sold it, and made money—no net cost. Technically inside the law my colleague from New Hampshire, the Senator from New Hampshire, is right. From a technical point of view he is absolutely right—that, if the price of refined sugar had dropped dramatically, there might be a loss. But the law says no net cost to taxpayers.

As a result of that we have put the loan rate at a rate to cover those margins, and it has no cost. He used an example of the veterans; the homeowner. I must tell my colleague from New Hampshire, my Senator friend, that he knows this—that when the Government loans money on a house they have the house as collateral. And if the person who borrows walks away from the house—and that happens—the Government has the house and they sell the house. They have the sugar and they sell the sugar.

He used student loans. Student loans are the only area where Government loans do not have collateral. Many students have walked away from their loans and the taxpayers had to eat them. That was increasingly so until the Senator from New Hampshire and I came in the early 1980's and said, "No. You can't do that kind of thing anymore. If we are going to loan money to students they have to pay it back." That became an increasing prerequisite of student loans throughout the 1980's and into the 1990's as we increasingly provided more money in the student loan program.

So if you loan money to a GI, in many instances on education, that is an outright gift. If you loan money to a student, you hope they pay it back. They are obligated to pay it back. If they declare bankruptcy and walk away from it, even though we put a no-bankruptcy clause in, some of them do not. Most of them do, thank goodness. But if the Federal Government borrows money on a house and the person walks away from the house, they can follow the person legally through the channels; and, if the person does not have any money, the Government has the house. That is the reality. We know those things.

In a nonrecourse loan to the refiner the Government has the sugar. The example of default cannot be painted to be dramatic because it hardly exists. It rarely exists. Over the last 2 years it has existed, and, when it did, the Government took the refined sugar, sold it, and made a little money above and beyond their expenses.

Mr. President, if the Government can operate a program like that that creates stability in the marketplace, that keeps thousands of farmers producing, that disallows the dumping of cheap sugar in our market and does so in a way that is of no net cost to the taxpayer, I would say that is probably a pretty good program. Maybe that is the way Government ought to work in this instance. It creates the kind of stability we want.

The amendment that the Senator from New Hampshire offers imposes an eligibility test for participation in what is now a new sugar program. For over 12 months we worked at defining a new program, and we put it in a 7-year farm bill. Growers began to plant to that farm bill this spring.

I would have hoped that my colleague would have accepted those reforms. But I understand that he does not. He wants the program eliminated. That is his choice to offer on the floor his amendment, and clearly he does that because nobody in my opinion can largely agree with his $10 million revenue threshold to establish it. If a refined cane miller or a sugar beet processor has annual revenue which exceeds $10 million they are not eligible for the program as written in the farm bill. Currently all U.S. raw cane millers and sugar beet processors have annual revenues above $10 million. Thus, no domestic produced sugar would be eligible for current loan programs if this amendment were enacted. This amendment will invalidate and render useless the hard-fought reform that I have just mentioned that won on this floor of the Senate by 61 to 35 vote.

In the loan program, while I think I have discussed that in a reasonably thorough way, Mr. President, USDA cannot make loans directly to the sugarcane or the sugar beet grower, as I have mentioned.

The reason is that raw sugarcane and beets are perishable, and although my colleague did not specifically speak to the collateralization of the loan, the loans are collateralized by refined sugar, and that is why the Government has not lost any money on this, not only by actual practice but by the law itself.

The loan rate for raw cane sugar is 18 cents under the new program and has been frozen at that level since 1985. The farm bill makes that freeze level a permanent one. The current loan rate is well below the domestic market price of 22 cents. So you have that cushion of protection between the 18 cents and the 22 cents.

USDA loans on sugar have consistently been repaid, as I have mentioned, with interest. It sounds as if our Government, in this instance, was a pretty good banker. The sugar program has been operated at no net cost. Meanwhile, U.S. consumers continue to buy sugar at a price some 28 percent below the average price in the rest of the world's developed countries.

For just a moment, Mr. President, let me speak briefly again about the nonrecourse versus recourse loans that go to the heart of the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. Currently, all sugar loans, along with wheat, cotton, rice, and corn, are nonrecourse loans. This means that the only way to collect repayment of the loan is to assume the collateral. Rather than collect massive stocks, USDA operates the program so that there are no loan forfeitures or cost to the Government.

What the opponents suggest is that this system be changed to basically a recourse loan program and the $10 million threshold. Under this system, the Government could use any means necessary to collect the value of a loan. No other commodity has a recourse loan.

Those are some facts that I think are extremely important as we deal with this issue.

Mr. President, because we are now just at the beginning of a new farm bill, and while all of us spent nearly 2 years crafting this document—and the Senator from New Hampshire was directly involved in trying to change it with amendments in this Chamber, which was certainly his right and his prerogative, so he and I and everyone else have had a substantial part in shaping the new farm policy, but we did it. We put it in effect for 7 years. As a result of that, scores of farm organizations around the country have said now it is time to leave it alone and let it work for a while under the promises that the Government collectively made would be a part of the program.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, the American Sheep Industry, the Society of Farm Managers and Rural Appraisers, the Soybean Association, National Association of Wheat Growers and Barley Growers, the National Corn Association, the National Cotton Council, the National Council of Farm Cooperatives, the National Sorghum Producers, the National Milk Producers Federation, the National Peanut Growers Association, the National Pork Producers Association, and the National Sugar Farmers and Processors, all of them have basically said now that you have crafted a farm bill, we urge you to stay with it because this is something you just do not change overnight. Certainly in my State of Idaho, the millions and millions of dollars of investment it takes to farm and to produce means that you do not quickly change the program if you change it overnight. Of course, the Congress has the right to do that. But we understand the importance of making sure that the program is stable.

I hope I have portrayed my opinion of the effects of this amendment by the Senator from New Hampshire. If not, I am sure he will correct me, and I will stand corrected if I am wrong. But I think it is important to remember that this is a program that since the early 1980's we have refined and shaped and reshaped so that we create stability in the market; that we offer a supply of sugar which is substantially less expensive than sugar and sweetener around the world; that we are in compliance with GATT, and as we move toward that, one of the things which is clearly understandable is that our level of participation in the program reduces as other governments around the world subsidize, sugar levels reduce because of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. All of that is part of how our Government has worked, and I believe properly so, under the direction of the Congress and under the new farm bill that we have before us.

So I hope that my colleagues in reviewing this amendment will reject it. I certainly do not plan to second degree it, and I do not know of anyone else who does. It is not my intention to want to put cute words around it, to try to hide the impact. I believe this program is strong enough to stand on its own, as it has in the past, as it did by a 61 to 35 vote several months ago on the floor of the Senate. And I hope that Senators, in reviewing this, could reject it out of hand and allow the program, which we have effectively refined and developed, to operate for a period of time to see if we get the savings.

Let me also conclude by saying that one of the things which is very important to remember—and I am not sure whether the Senator's amendment would therefore forfeit this figure—one of the results of the program and the no net cost to the taxpayer is the assessments that are generated through the new program that will produce about $300 million in deficit reduction.

Now, if the Senator is still going to say let us keep the assessments but let us kill the program, then, in essence, he has created a new tax on producers, because we not only eliminated marketing allotments, we implemented a 1-cent penalty effectively lowering loan rates and we have an assessment that will generate about $300 million in deficit reduction to the Treasury over the life of the program of 7 years. As a result of that, we think we have put together a positive reform package not only for the American taxpayer, but, in this instance, for the producer-processor to create a stable market for the commodity that they produce.

I yield back the time.

Mr. GREGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. I certainly appreciate the eloquence and the aggressiveness and obviously the effectiveness of the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Idaho in defending the sugar program as it impacts their sugar beet growers who, in most instances, I suspect—I suspect in all instances—are very hard working, farm community votes. However, the sugar program itself is structured in a way that it benefits a lot of major corporate farm activity, and that farm activity, as I mentioned before, is extraordinarily expensive to the American consumer in an unfair and unjust and unmarket-oriented way.

The argument on the other side appears to have fallen into a few categories. Let me try to respond to them in some sort of argument.

The first argument is that this amendment would eliminate the program because any processor doing more than $10 million in business would be out of the program. No, that is not true. I think that is simply not true. It would say that any processor who generates more than $10 million in annual sales would have to pay their loans back—just like a student, just like a veteran, just like a homeowner.

Now, there was some representation that we do not collect veterans' loans and maybe they are an outright gift. I do not think so. I think most veterans pay back their loans, but if they are not paid back, the Federal Government has the right to go after them individually. The same thing of a student. If a student does not pay back his or her loan—it happens a lot, unfortunately—the Federal Government has the right to collect that. Of course, in the homeowner's situation, that is a collateralized event. The Federal Government takes the home, sells the home, but if there is a deficiency, in other words, if there is a difference between what that home is sold for under foreclosure and what the note is paid out for and the note exceeded the foreclosure price of the loan, the individual remains personally responsible for that amount.

What we are suggesting is that a $10 million processor as a consortium, as a co-op or as a manufacturing cooperation, the $10 million processor should have to be liable also just like the student is, just like the veteran is, just like the homeowner is for that loan. So the program is still very much available. It is available under approximately the same terms and conditions relative to default and recovery that a loan to a student is, that a loan to a veteran is, and that a loan to a HUD recipient of a home ownership loan is. You have to pay the loan. You have to pay back the Government. That is all we are asking.

So the program is very much vibrant and alive. To reflect the fact that there is a sort of inherent contradiction in this debate that I hear from the other side, the position of the other side, on the one hand, they are saying this proposal, which is to allow people to borrow the money but to have to pay it back, versus borrow the money and then if they decide they do not want to pay it back they can just turn over their sugar to the Government—that this proposal is going to have a disastrous, debilitating, totally scorched earth effect on the farm program; and then I heard that nobody has ever defaulted, or if there has been a default they sold the collateral for more than the loan was worth.

So why is this such a terrible event? Why is it such a terrible event to make it a matter of public policy that people who borrow money from the Federal Government should pay it back? I guess it is a terrible event because it happens to be perceived, I think, as a threat to the sugar growers and the sugar processors. They maybe see it as a camel's-nose-under-the-tent approach to the issue of their $1.4 billion subsidy which they are taking the American consumer to the cleaners with.

But, as a practical matter, the debate on the other side of this issue has defended the position I have proposed in this amendment, because they have stated accurately that there have been no defaults that would have created recourse beyond the collateral, and, therefore, why should it matter to the industry if they find themselves subject to recourse loans? Especially when you have an Agriculture Department that is controlling the importation of sugar so it keeps the price of sugar 4 to 5 cents above what the loan price is? I mean, really. It is like going into a blackjack game and saying, "You have to deal me both an ace and a jack. If you do not deal me the ace and the jack, I am not going to play."

In this case we are going to give them the ace and the jack, I guess. But it makes no sense, that if they should, by some strange coincidence end up losing, they should not at least expect the Federal Government should be paid back. It is hard to believe there is a scenario where under the present scenario they would lose. As long as the Department of Agriculture is going to keep the price 4 cents or 5 cents above the loan price, how do you ever end up with the collateral being less than the loan? It is pretty hard to see that fact pattern occurring.

But I am told this amendment devastates the program. How does it devastate a program when the defense of the opposition has been that there has never been a default, and when the numbers, on their face, speak for themselves that if there were a default, there would not be any recourse?

No, I do not think it devastates the program. It does not affect the program at all. That was my point when I first started this. I said, "Gee, I would really like to do something about this program but I know I cannot win. But let us at least get ourselves on some sort of even keel relative to the American taxpayer and relative to fairness. If we are going to say to the homeowner and the student and the veteran you have to pay your loans back, let us say to the processor you have to pay your loan back, too. That is the purpose of this."

So I do not think there is any substance to that argument. I think the substance of it was undermined by the presentation of the defense. To the effect there was a substantive point made in the opposition, it went to the issue of this price stability, which was specifically stated by the Senator from North Dakota and clearly implied and alluded to by the Senator from Idaho.

Essentially, the theme of that position was that if you do not have price stability in sugar, then you are going to have up-and-down years, you are going to have years when the price will go down, when there is dumping, and years when the price will go up. So the idea is to have 23 cents or 22 cents all the time for sugar, even though the world market price is 13 cents. Granted that may be a dump price, for all I know. It may not be, but it could be a dumped price. But there is clearly a heck of a lot of difference, there is a big difference between 22 cents, 23 cents, and 13 cents. So somewhere in there is the real price of sugar one presumes, between those two numbers. It is pretty obvious the American consumer is paying a lot more than the real price, if the world dump market is 13 cents.

So, if that is the case, if the purpose here is to maintain a stable price for sugar, if that is the real gravamen of the argument, and that price always has to be 23 cents or 22 cents—and why is that number picked? That number is picked because the loan price is 18 cents and they do not want anybody defaulting on their loan. If we apply that logic to all the commodities made in this country: All right, let us see, now. A couple of weeks ago my son bought a MacIntosh computer. I bought it for him for his birthday. The price of that computer, as I recall, was somewhere in the $1,500 range. It was a pretty expensive item, but it was for schooling. It seemed like a good investment. His sisters can use it.

All prices of all computers should be $1,500—right? The theory of the sugar program is the price for a commodity should be the same price at all times, because the prices might go up and the prices might go down; if you want to maintain stability—we have a lot more people working in the old computer industry in this world, in the Apple computer industry, I suspect, than make sugar. I bet there are probably more people that work for Apple Computer than produce sugar.

What has happened to Apple computers because they have not had a Department of Agriculture fixing the price of that product? The prices went down. I found out a few days ago I could have bought the same computer I bought a few months ago for $400 less, because there is something called a price war going on in the computer industry. And, worse than that, for the folks at Apple, they are in serious trouble. They have had to lay off thousands of people, because their product was not able to maintain the employment. And the prices of computers and other computers that have been brought on the market that have made that Apple computer, which is a heck of a good computer, I think—especially the software in it—be not as competitive with whatever the appropriate other computer that is competing: Dell, AST, Gateway, Digital. Digital is a great computer, by the way—made in New Hampshire.

The point here, of course, is: It is called a marketplace. It is called America. It is called a market system. It is called capitalism. It is called "what made this country great." It is called competition, worldwide, sometimes.

Take another little commodity called cars. Shall we fix all Chevrolets at the price of Chevrolets sold in the year 1979 or 1985? We could, I suppose. Then we would not allow the Japanese to import to compete.

I think we went through that, did we not? That is why the Big Three had such a tough time, because their quality went down because they did not have the competition. Prices stayed up. Then, when they did get the competition, it took them a while to turn around. Of course, with American know-how they did it pretty quickly, didn't they?

Now you have the most viable and energized car producers in the world, and they are American again. For a while, of course, we had a huge Japanese threat to our industry, but we responded.

Are we to say that the sugar growers in this country would not be able to compete? I do not know, I guess that is exactly what we are saying in this plan. But, essentially, this concept of stable prices, which has been alluded to specifically by the Senator from North Dakota and clearly highlighted or addressed by the Senator from Idaho, is another term for non-market-place economy. It is another term for price fixing. Price fixing does not benefit the consumer. It does not benefit the marketplace. It benefits that small group of people who are able to benefit from the fixed price which, in this case, happens to be a very small group of sugar growers, and it is extremely expensive to the American economy.

There was a statement that there are no tax dollars at risk; the taxpayers pay nothing. Well, if you say that the dollar that a taxpayer pays in taxes and a dollar a taxpayer takes out of his wallet to pay for sugar does not come out of the same wallet, then I guess taxpayers are not impacted. If the taxpayers are some mythical beings out there who don't go to the marketplace and buy food then, yes, there is no impact on the taxpayers.

But if the taxpayers happen to be real, live Americans who go down to the grocery store and buy food with those dollars that are left over after the Government takes their money for taxes, well, then it does impact them quite a bit, because they are paying somewhere around twice the going rate for the price of sugar. They are paying $1.4 billion a year more to buy that sugar than they should have to. But this amendment does not address that issue, that outrageous issue which I would love to address. Unfortunately, I cannot get the votes to address it. But this amendment does not address that issue. This amendment addresses the fact that these are loans that do not get paid back if they go bad.

Granted, it may never happen. It may never happen that the Agriculture Department is able to manipulate, through controlling imports, something that comes close enough to the loan price so that there never is a loan that goes bad. But there ought to be a statement of policy, at least, that this Congress expects the $10 million processor to at least be as liable for his or her loans or its loans from the Federal Government as we expect the struggling student, the veteran and the homeowner.

There were a couple of ancillary issues that were raised that I think need to be addressed. Maybe I already addressed them. I was even more thorough than I thought in my statement, so I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. COCHRAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, let me compliment those who participated in this debate for the efforts they made to fully acquaint the Senate with the issue that is before us with the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

My reaction to it at this point is that this is an issue that has been before the Senate, was before the Senate, was fully debated when we were undertaking to write the new farm bill, which contained a lot of market transition reforms, included reforms in the Sugar Program and many others, and this issue has been resolved, or at least a bill was passed by the House and Senate, a conference occurred, a conference report was written.

This is the conference report that was compiled by conferees on the part of the House and the Senate, almost 500 pages in length, devoted to farm programs and the role of the Federal Government and the private sector in trying to make available to Americans abundant supplies of reasonably priced foods and commodities.

The President signed the bill, and this is the law. The bill before the Senate today simply funds the activities of the Department of Agriculture and related agencies. It doesn't seek to address suggested changes in agriculture or farm policy, as such, but simply to undertake to allocate to this Department the funds it needs to carry out its responsibilities as defined by the law.

So this is a proposal by the Senator from New Hampshire to change the law and, therefore, it seems to me ought not to be adopted by the Senate. It is very technical, obviously. I was reading section 156 in the conference report that deals with the Sugar Program, and it talks about the nonrecourse and the recourse loans that are a part of that program, and it is very, very technical.

I was thinking, how is a Senator who is not a member of the Agriculture Committee, has not been a party to the hearings and discussions about how this is going to work as a practical matter, how is he going to be able to decide, how is she going to be able to decide whether this is an amendment they want to vote for or against.

These are arguments that have been made on both sides of the issues. I compliment the Senators involved. I think the only thing we can be sure of is we will vote on this. We will vote on this amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the vote will occur in due course of proceeding on this bill. It will not occur today. But under the order entered for the consideration of the bill today, it would be put over and a vote will occur tomorrow.

I am going to have to come down on the side of the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from North Dakota in arguing that the amendment be voted down. I hope Senators will vote against the amendment, with due respect to my very good friend from New Hampshire, whom I admire greatly.

Mr. President, we are prepared to receive other amendments, or any further debate on this amendment would be in order if Senators care to debate the amendment.

Mr. MCCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

AMENDMENT NO. 4968

(Purpose: To restore funding for the Agriculture Research Service at the level approved by the House of Representatives)

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside, and I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] proposes an amendment numbered 4968.

On page 10, line 18, strike "$721,758,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$702,831,000".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this amendment would restore the funding level for the Agriculture Research Service at the House-passed amount. Simply, if the amendment is adopted, we will save $18,927,000, which represents a 3-percent cut from the Senate level.

No Agriculture Research Service programs will be put in jeopardy. No dire outcome will result. Mr. President, it is a very simple amendment. While the Senate does not and should not function as a rubber stamp of House action, the other body was entirely correct when it funded the Agriculture Research Service at $702,831,000.

Mr. President, in the Department of Agriculture appropriations bill, a lot of the unnecessary spending is in the Agriculture Research Service program. Certainly, there is a legitimate need for agricultural research. We all agree on that point.

Let me emphasize, voting for this amendment will not contradict that point. Voting for the amendment does affirm our belief that we must scale back our spending in a responsible manner.

The House funded the Agriculture Research Service at a very reasonable level at $702 million. Again, I want to note that this is a 3-percent cut from the Senate level. I believe that we could cut this nearly $1 billion program by 3 percent.

Mr. President, there is other language in the bill and in the accompanying committee report that concerns me. I would like to raise some of those issues at this time. On page 51 of the bill, the House had language that stated no funding made available under this title shall be used for new studies and evaluations. I applaud the House for inserting this prohibition in the bill. Unfortunately, the Senate struck the House provision and inserted instead the $6 million cap on studies and evaluations. Unfortunately, many of these studies are not necessary or could be privately funded. I hope that when the bill is conferenced, the Senate will recede to the House on this matter.

The committee report continues to recommend funding for a wide variety of specific industry areas. I believe that such earmarking is detrimental to the agriculture industry as a whole because it encourages funding to go to those industries with the best lobbyists or those favored by the members of the committee. All research grants should be based on national priority and competitive bid.

As an example, I would like to comment briefly on the shrimp aquaculture research provisions contained on page 39 of the committee report. The committee recommended a $300,000 increase in Federal funding for shrimp research. Mr. President, the U.S. shrimp industry is a profitable, multibillion-dollar-a-year industry. While it is true that the Asian shrimp industry is much larger than the U.S. shrimp industry—I understand that some desire that we should have an American source of shrimp—it seems that increased Government funding of the shrimp industry is not needed at this time.

Mr. President, my staff met with shrimp industry representatives who explained their ongoing concern with foreign diseases infiltrating our national shrimp farms. I share their concern. However, since the shrimp industry is a profitable industry, and since the Federal Government already spends over $3 million a year on shrimp aquaculture research, this new financial need should be met by the shrimp industry itself.

Again, I hope when the bill goes to conference that the House demand its language on this matter and that Federal involvement with the shrimp industry be kept at a minimum.

I also want to express my concern that the Senate added language to the bill on page 33 that funds the National Natural Resources Conservation Foundation at no more than $250,000. This sounds very good, but it raises many questions. First, according to the act which established the National Natural Resources Conservation Foundation, Public Law 104–127, the foundation is "a charitable and non profit corporation * * * [and] is not an agency or instrumentality of the United States."

The law also notes the numerous duties of the foundation, many of which I agree with. But I want to note that the last of the duties proscribed in the law for this private corporation is "[to] raise private funds to promote the purposes of the foundation." The law states this is a private organization that should raise funds and promote certain agricultural activities. I think we should let the corporation follow that law.

Mr. President, isn't the concept of a private corporation that it is private, therefore, not funded by the Federal Government? In general, private corporations should not be funded with Federal dollars. I hope the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture will not use any appropriated money to fund this organization. While there is a legitimate role for some Federal dollars to be used by private corporations for certain select activities that are necessary but which might otherwise go unfunded, this is not one of those exceptions.

Again, Mr. President, this is a simple amendment. It represents a 3-percent cut in the Agriculture Research Service program and restores the House of Representatives-passed funding level for the program. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. President, I have read the report language of the bill rather carefully. There are many worthwhile and worthy causes. Some of them I do not quite understand. Some of them are somewhat unusual, to say the least. Grape research, hops, insect rearing, goat grass control, nutrition intervention projects, cotton value-added/quality research, apple research, alfalfa research, corn germplasm research.

Mr. President, all these, I am sure, are worthwhile, but many Americans who are facing cuts in Medicare, cuts in Medicaid, cuts in food stamps, Social Security being in financial jeopardy would ask the question—and I think it is a legitimate one—should the taxpayers be paying for a fish farming experiment laboratory? Should the taxpayers be paying for cotton value-added/quality research? Should the taxpayers be paying for corn germplasm research? Apple research? Alfalfa research? Funding children's hospitals?

Mr. President, the question, I think, is a legitimate one. I have no information that the apple industry in America is in such dire straits that they need to have Federal dollars spent on apple research. I wonder if the apple industry in America could pay for apple research. I have no information that the Arkansas children's hospital is in such bad shape that it needs to have an additional $425,000 of taxpayers' dollars.

Bee research. I did not know that the Hayden Bee ARS Laboratory in Tucson, AZ, required earmarked funding. Mr. President, I did not know that the wheat industry was in such bad shape that it needed an additional $450,000 above the 1996 level for the ARS Pacific Northwest Club Wheat Breeding Program.

What I am saying, Mr. President, is it all gets down to the question about the role of government in our society. I was under the distinct impression that, at least on this side of the aisle, Members felt that the role of government in our society should be prioritized to provide for national security and for those in our society who are unable to take care of themselves who need our help, and certainly otherwise important programs.

I do not understand the logic behind funding with taxpayers' dollars industry, whether it be fish farms or grapes or cotton or wheat or bees, when those industries are not only not in need, but according to the information I have received that agriculture is one of the healthiest industries in America.

So I hope that we will make a modest cut and restore the House level of funding. Mr. President, I have very few illusions as to the prospects of this amendment, but I would suggest that sooner or later the American people will continue to question and question severely this kind of funding. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, let me respond to the Senator from Arizona by saying that when we looked at the President's budget request for funding of the Agriculture Research Service activities, we, too, thought that the request was too high. Our careful evaluation of the needs for research done by the Agriculture Research Service resulted in our reducing the amount available for this activity by $7 million. So the proposal that is before the Senate is $7 million less than requested by the administration.

Let me also point out one other thing. I noticed the Senator's amendment would cut $18 million from the Senate-recommended figure, $18 million from what the Senate recommended. We are already $7 million below the President's request. He does that, he says, to bring our number to the point where we would agree with the House on the level of funding for these activities. The House number is $702 million in total. The bad part is, if you look at the House numbers individually in all the items in the bill that the House says should be funded, it adds up to $710 million more or less.

Draw the bottom line and put $702 million. He wants us to join that hocus-pocus and suggest we want individual projects funded up and down the line in their bill, and if you add them all up it is $710 million, round numbers, but they draw the bottom line and put $702. I will not submit a bill to the floor of this Senate and do that and say I am cutting spending more than we really are recommending when you look at the individual items.

What they are forcing the Department of Agriculture to do, if the Senate goes along with that, we are misrepresenting to the general public, we are misrepresenting to the Department of Agriculture, what our recommendation is. We are forcing the Department to pick out $7 million in cuts and impose them somewhere, and disavowing any connection with it. We are disavowing paternity with a $7 million cut.

If we are going to impose the cut to $702 million, identify where the cuts are going to be. If you are going to cut the Arkansas Research Program that the Department of Agriculture runs, you have to spell it out. If you are going to cut an Arizona cotton research activity that is a substantial investment of dollars in a new facility, say it. Say you are cutting western cotton research, and point out it is done in Arizona. Just to simply say we are spending more than we need but not say how, where, when, or to what extent, that is not right.

Now, after the Senator completed his proposal where he makes this $18 million cut, he then talked about other parts of the bill he found obnoxious that do not have anything to do with Agricultural Research Service funding. If there are programs that should not be funded, I suggest we ought to spell it out. Amendments ought to target those projects. If that is what the complaint is, offer an amendment that does that. But to offer an across-the-board cut which if we passed would force the Department to make the decisions, we would not have any responsibility for doing that. That is irresponsibility. That is not accountability.

I sympathize with the Senator's proposal that we make sure the dollars that are invested in research are, No. 1, needed, serve some public interest, are reviewed carefully. I can assure the Senate and I can assure the Senator from Arizona that will be undertaken here.

He did specifically mention shrimp research for shrimp farming operations and how they were money-making enterprises and they did not need the research dollars. I convened a hearing just on that issue last year to determine what some of the problems were in aquaculture in fresh water, some salt water shrimp and other aquaculture activities. I found out there was an epidemic of exotic viruses that have attacked the shrimp in those operations and we were, in exchange, importing huge quantities of shrimp from China and other foreign sources because we could not meet the supplies needed here for wholesome, safe shrimp and other seafood. This was a growing industry. It was one that had a lot of promise but it was about to be wiped out. These funds that are made available are made available on condition that the industry come up with its own money to help match the dollars that are put up by the Government to get to the bottom of this problem, and it is a problem.

Here is the hearing. This is a hearing record. This is not something the industry just came in and tried to push over on us. I am convinced the dollars that are made available for that activity are needed. The purpose, to provide high health and genetically improved stocks, to control disease agents, to enhance environmental protection, and to develop animal husbandry methods. All of this is needed if we are going to save this industry from a doom, a doom that will cause us to have to rely on foreign sources of these products. We already do. But we will be completely reliant on them if we are not careful, if we let this virus problem spread, if do not figure out how to stop it. That is needed. I will stand behind it. The record supports the need. I hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

Mr. GREGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the Senator's amendment number 4959.

AMENDMENT NO. 4969 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4959

(Purpose: To prohibit the use of funds to make loans to large processors of sugarcane and sugar beets unless the loans require the processors to repay the full amount of the loans, plus interest)

Mr. GREGG. I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GREGG] proposes an amendment numbered 4969 to amendment No. 4959.

Mr. GREGG. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike all after the word "SEC." and insert the following:

REPAYMENT OF CERTAIN SUGAR LOANS.

None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act may be used to make a loan to a processor of sugarcane or sugar beets, or both, who has an annual revenue that exceeds $15 million, unless the terms of the loan require the processor to repay the full amount of the loan, plus interest.

Mr. GREGG. This is the same as the underlying amendment, but it changes the amount that is required of processors to have recourse on from a $10 million threshold to a $15 million threshold. After that, it is a more lenient amendment than the first, if we presume we are requiring people to pay back loans.

It does not, I think, aggravate the situation and should not from the standpoint of my colleagues who feel differently on this amendment than I do. I offer it to protect my position in the batting order here.

I make one additional point. There was a point made on the other side, and this is, really, ancillary to the overall debate but needs to be responded to. There was a point made on the other side that the Sugar Program as presently structured actually causes a net "infloat" of the Treasury because this is an assessment process. However, if you take into effect in the calculation the cost to the Federal Government of having to buy sugar for products which it uses and food stamps and military feeding and child nutrition at the inflated rate we must pay because the Federal Government is a fairly large consumer—also as I mentioned, and I suspect ad nauseam for my colleagues, the price here is dramatically more than the price the market would be were this a market-oriented program versus price-control program.

GAO has advised us the cost to the Federal Government, by letter of July 18, the cost in 1994 to the Federal Government for purchasing products which had inflated prices due to the cost of sugar was approximately $90 million annually. So that exceeds, by, I think, a factor of three, what is alleged to be the positive cash flow of this program to the Treasury.

Let me read the operative sentences:

> In 1994, total expenditures on food were approximately $647 billion. Of this amount, approximately $42 billion was government expenditures for food purchases and cash transfers to consumers for food purchases. This represented 6.5 percent of all domestic food expenditures. Applying this to the $1.4 billion cost of the sugar program, we estimate that the government's additional cost of purchasing food and providing the level of food assistance it delivered in 1994, was approximately $90 million.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 18, 1995.

Congressional Requesters,

In our report entitled Sugar Program; Changing Domestic and International Conditions Require Program Changes (GAO/RCED-93-84, Apr. 16, 1993), we estimated that the U.S. sugar program costs sweetener users an average of $1.4 billion annually. In this context, you requested that we estimate how much the sugar program increases the government's costs of purchasing food and conducting food assistance programs.

While it is impossible to precisely quantify the direct costs of the sugar program to the government, we have approximated the government's additional costs, based on its share of total domestic food expenditures. In 1994, total expenditures on food were approximately $647 billion. Of this amount, approximately $42 billion was government expenditures for food purchases and cash transfers to consumers for food purchases. This represented 6.5 percent of all domestic food expenditures. Applying this percentage to the $1.4 billion cost of the sugar program, we estimate that the government's additional cost of purchasing food and providing the level of food assistance it delivered in 1994, was approximately $90 million.

Table I provides more detail, by program, on the government's expenditures on direct food purchases and cash assistance for consumer food purchases. These calculations are approximated, using the best available information.

While raising the costs of purchasing food and conducting food assistance programs, the sugar program generates some revenues through marketing assessments on sugar. On average, these marketing assessments total $30 million annually. If the sugar program did not exist, these assessments would not be collected.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment in the second degree.

AMENDMENT NO. 4968

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Arizona is arbitrary at best and capricious at worst.

The year 1995 culminated a series of cuts in agricultural research over a period of years. In other words, agricultural research funds had been cut every year for several years. In 1995, for the first time in this Nation's history, agricultural yields per acre failed to increase. That was on an apples-and-apples basis, where rainfall and so on was taken into consideration.

Now, the suggestion is, and I am not familiar enough with that study to know, but the suggestion is that as we have cut agricultural research money, we are finally being caught up by lower yields of agricultural products per acre.

When I was a youngster, 15 or 20 bushels of soybeans per acre in much of my State was ordinary. Today, even unirrigated beans ought to make 30 to 40 bushels per acre. Rice, I can remember when 50 to 75 bushels of rice per acre was a big crop, and today it is not uncommon, at all, in my State, for rice farmers to make 200 bushels of rice per acre.

Cotton. When I was a kid, because we did not have any antidote to the boll weevil, a half-bale of cotton to the acre was considered a pretty good crop. And everybody knows what Norman Borlaug did for wheat production in this country. All of those things were not accidental. They were done because the Federal Government put money into agricultural research. Right now, the fire ant is moving north. Southern Arkansas is covered with fire ants. They do a tremendous amount of damage. Killer bees are moving up from Mexico.

Mr. President, I am one of the people who think we probably made a mistake when we eliminated the honey program. The honey program cost very little. The reason I had real trouble with that amendment is because bees pollinate plants; 15 percent of all the pollinization in this country is done by native honey bees. The killer bees coming up from Mexico are killing our bees, and, in addition, there are strains of virus and other threats to honey bees that need to be understood. That takes research. Once we understand the problems, solutions will follow.

I saw a story the other day that was interesting to me because the cranberry farmers of Massachusetts, for example, are getting terribly upset because they depend on bee farmers to bring their hives to their crops and pollinate them. I am not sure New Hampshire does not have some crops similar to that, which honeybee farmers bring into New Hampshire. And now the average life of a beehive has gone from 3 years to 1 year. Oh, yes, we spent Federal dollars every year subsidizing the honey industry through research. But I can tell you that is peanuts—if you will pardon the expression—compared to the benefit that honey bees do for the American farmers in pollinating their crops.

The Senator from Arizona mentioned aquaculture. Thirty years ago, the farmers of Arkansas started raising catfish, domestically raised catfish. And all the world, if they are not already familiar, should know that it is the most beautiful, delicious, delicate, succulent fish ever known. We went into the catfish farming business almost out of necessity because we irrigate our rice crops and we store the water in the wintertime. The farmers decided that as long as they have these big ponds of stored water that they use to irrigate rice with, why not figure out another use for those rice irrigating ponds.

My predecessor in the U.S. Senate, Bill Fulbright, helped come up with the idea of raising catfish in those ponds. Mr. President, would you like to know how many pounds of catfish we could raise a year per acre? Seven-hundred pounds. And so at least we started a couple of catfish research projects called aquaculture—all fish-raising is aquaculture. We have one in Mississippi and one in Arkansas. In Arkansas we think continued research is important and 2 years ago we made substantial investments to improve our aquaculture research facilities in Stuttgart. The 1996 farm bill redesignated that facility as the National Aquaculture Research Center, and I can tell you we are all very proud of it. Some of the magazines called it a $7 million fish farm. It had nothing to do with fish farming beyond its application of new information for fish farmers; it was all research. But over the period of the last 30 years, because the Federal Government has put money into fish farming research, catfish farming research, production of catfish per acre has gone from 700 pounds per acre per year to 4,400 pounds per acre per year. And unless we continue to fund agriculture research, we are going to be sitting around the breakfast table looking at each other wondering what we are going to eat that day.

On the front page of the Metro section of the Post this morning there was an interesting article concerning blue crab in the Chesapeake Bay? The crop this year is so sparse that 500 crab pickers are out of work. And the ones who are working are working 3 days a week. Now, if somebody came in here and said they had a beautiful idea for replenishing the crab population of the bay, I might vote for it. I can assure you that those employed in the crabbing industry around Chesapeake Bay and consumers who enjoy reasonably priced crabmeat would be asking us to vote for it.

The Senator from Arizona mentioned Children's Hospital in Arkansas. I can remember when the Children's Hospital in Arkansas was just a small hospital to treat severely burned children. Today, it is one of the finest state-of-the-art children's hospitals in America. And this is the third year we have put money in that. What is the Department of Agriculture doing giving money to the Children's Hospital in Arkansas? It is for a really sophisticated nutrition program. Do you know something else? The Children's Hospital in Little Rock is putting up a lot of money—millions—to build a facility to house this nutrition program. I never knew what a children's hospital was. A hospital was a hospital to me, until my daughter became ill and the pediatrician said, "You ought to take her to Boston." The finest children's hospital in the world is in Boston, MA. That is where I took her. Today, I would not have to go to Boston because of the tremendous strides of the Arkansas Children's Hospital.

A member of my family left a week ago and went to the emergency room of one of the hospitals in Washington, DC, and there were three residents standing there. This new doctor, a young man, walked in. He had just joined Georgetown University Hospital. When he found out I was from Arkansas, he said, "You know, when I finished my training and started looking for a place to settle, believe it or not, I went to Little Rock, AR. I looked over your Children's Hospital, and I never got such a shock in my life. It is one of the finest facilities I have ever been in. I nearly decided to stay in Little Rock, not only because of the facilities but because of the quality of the people there."

There is $425,000 in this bill to continue funding what we hope will be one of the finest children's and nutrition programs in the United States. Now, I can remember when it took 9 to 12 weeks to grow a broiler, a chicken, for the retail fresh market. Today, you do it in 6 weeks. Do you know why? Because of agriculture research.

So I cannot say much more than the chairman has already said. He made a beautiful speech on the McCain amendment a moment ago. I hope when the time comes that the amendment, which, as I say, is arbitrary at best, will be soundly defeated.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Robert Hedberg, who is working for the Senate Agriculture Committee, be given floor privileges during the debate on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GREGG). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I rise to simply advise the Senate that the Senator from Massachusetts came over a while ago to ask if he could have 10 minutes as if in morning business to talk about a subject that he discussed in the Senate earlier, and hadn't been able to complete his remarks. I suggested that he come over around 4:30, thinking that there might be a lull in the action so that he could proceed with morning business remarks. But I know the Senator from North Dakota is here to talk about the issue before the Senate. I hope we can resolve it so that the Senator from Massachusetts can have a few minutes following the Senator from North Dakota, or preceding the Senator, whatever is their pleasure.

Mr. CONRAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

AMENDMENT NO. 4959

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, they are at it again. The critics of farm programs are suggesting bad policy for agriculture and are trying to break the promise just made to the American farmer.

On April 4 this year, the President signed into law the 1996 farm bill. That is April 4 of this year. The proponents of that bill claim they had a 7-year plan for agriculture, one that promised to be reliable, one that promised to provide certainty, one that promised to reduce Government interference.

The farm bill passed, and now we see how quickly their promises have been broken. The House Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee proposed additional cuts in addition to those already made in commodity payments under the freedom to farm legislation. They broke their promise to the American farmer—not 7 years later, but 7 weeks later. So much for reliability and certainty.

Thankfully, those additional cuts in commodity payments were rejected at the full committee level. But the critics of the farm program did not stop there. They proposed, on the House side, capping raw sugar prices. Imagine, people who advocate market orientation are placing into law a limit on what prices could be in an industry. If that is not Government interference, I do not know what is.

Under that amendment, the Republican-led House would be telling the Government to reach into the sugar market and place an arbitrary cap on prices. It is the ultimate irony—Government interference at its worst. Once again, a promise was broken.

Now today we are faced with an amendment to interfere even more with what was just agreed to months ago. The Gregg amendment eliminates the safety net U.S. producers have against heavily subsidized foreign competition.

The Senator from New Hampshire I think is well-motivated, well-intended, but I think sadly misinformed as to international sugar and about what happens in these markets. And I would say to my colleague from New Hampshire that this is not like Dell Computer, or Apple Computer, or IBM. Oh, no, that is not the way the sugar market works in the world. This is not a free market. That is a nice idea—a textbook idea—but it is not the real world. The sugar industry worldwide works in a much different way. Every major producing country has a program—every one. We are not talking about a free market. We are talking about heavy Government involvement in every one of these producing countries.

What the Senator from New Hampshire wants to do is say to the U.S. industry, "You go out there and compete against all these other countries, but without the benefit of a program. You go out there, and we are going to engage in unilateral disarmament here in America." We are going to say to our folks, "You go out and compete not only against other countries' farmers, but against the governments of other countries, and good luck. We hope everything will work out." Everything will not work out.

Anybody who has looked at the sugar industry and what has happened knows better, knows precisely what will happen, if we say to our producers, "You go out there and compete against heavily subsidized foreign sugar and see what happens." We all know what will happen. Our folks will go broke, because the treasuries of these countries with whom we are competing are a lot bigger than the treasuries of the individual producers.

That is the reality of what we face here. This notion that the Senator advocates that U.S. sugar policy unfairly inflates U.S. prices over world prices is absolutely untrue—absolutely untrue. All of us know what happens if you take away the sugar program. This chart shows what has happened the two times we eliminated the sugar program. Here is what happened to prices. They skyrocketed in both cases in the early 1970's and in the early 1980's. Prices skyrocketed. Why? Because the market knew we were headed for turbulence, a lack of certainty, that people would dramatically reduce their plantings. And what would happen is you would see shortages, spot shortages. And those who are producers of sugar, refiners, bid up the price in order to assure themselves of a stable supply. That is what has happened repeatedly.

Unfortunately, when my colleague says, "Gee, look at the price. The sugar price is 22 cents a pound, and the world price is 13 cents. Well, there is evidence, there is clear evidence that this sugar program is gouging consumers." Nonsense, absolute nonsense.

Eighty-five percent of the sugar that is marketed in the world moves under contract. This sugar is not in the world market at all. It is moved under a contract. For this reason, the so-called world market is not a world market. It is a dump market. It is where the sugar sells that is not under contract. That is why you see the prices in the so-called world market, the dump market, selling for 13 cents.

Look at what happens if you eliminate the sugar program. We know what happens. Every time it has been tried, prices skyrocket. And who got hurt? I will tell you who got hurt. The consumer got hurt. This is not a free-market model. That is not what is happening in world sugar production.

Make no mistake: The Gregg amendment kills the sugar program. If you want to kill the sugar program, there is a way to do it—pass the Gregg amendment. If you want to sock it to consumers, pass the Gregg amendment. Prices will skyrocket. We know, it has happened before whenever somebody actually got a mind to pursue this course. But not only will it hurt consumers, it will hurt American producers, because even though prices will go up, American producers will be hurt. Why? Because we will get a flood of foreign sugar into the U.S. market.

We know what will happen. It happened every time in the past when this and the other Chamber has decided that we should eliminate the sugar program, that we were going to be free from the world and act as though there is some free market in world sugar. There is no free market.

Let me just say that the Gregg amendment is not a program. It is a recipe for disaster. It will force dozens of millers and processors and thousands of farmers out of business. This is not some insignificant amendment.

In my State, there are thousands of farmers that depend on sugar for a substantial part of their income. Kill this program, and you kill them. And they know it. They know exactly what is happening in these world markets. They know exactly what has happened with other countries' programs. They know exactly what we are up against in these world markets.

For those less familiar with sugar policy, loans are not made to these producers, because beets and cane are not storable commodities. It is unlike other commodities such as grains, such as corn and wheat. Those are programs that have a payment that goes directly to producers because those are storable commodities.

That is not the case in sugar. Sugarcane and sugar beets are not storable. So what we have is a program where the loans are made to the millers and processors who store the raw cane or the processed beet sugar. As a result, producers are intricately tied to the millers and processors. If millers and processors are no longer able to use the loan program, they will simply go out of business and they will take farmers with them, make no mistake.

Let us just look at how many beet processors and cane mills have already gone out of business. This chart clearly shows that this industry is already facing hard times. This shows what has happened to beet and cane processing mills that have gone out of business since 1990. If anybody thinks there is some big windfall out here, somebody is getting rich on this program, let us look at the record.

Why did all these folks go out of business if it is so good? Let us look at beet and cane processing mills. This is just since 1990. The record since 1980 is a whole lot darker.

Let us just look since 1990. Delta Sugar Co., beet plant, California, went under in 1993; Holly Sugar, California, beet plant, 1993; Columbia Sugar, cane plant, went out of business, Louisiana, 1994; Hamakua Sugar, cane plant, Hawaii, 1994; Hilo Coast Processing, again, cane sugar, went out of business in 1994; Oahu Sugar, cane plant, Hawaii, 1994; Spreckels Sugar, again, a California plant—this is a beet plant—went out of business in 1996; Holly Sugar, Hamilton City, CA, beet plant, went out of business in 1996; Ka'u Agribusiness Co., cane plant, Hawaii, 1996, went out of business; Kaialua Sugar Co., cane plant, Hawaii, 1996, went out of business; McBryde Sugar, cane plant, Hawaii, went out of business in 1996; Western Sugar, Mitchell, NE, beet plant, went out of business in 1996.

One after another, right out of business, and you pass the Gregg amendment and we will be able to provide next year chart after chart after chart just like this one of companies that have gone out of business. That is what we are talking about. The stakes are high.

Let me be clear. The Gregg amendment benefits the sugar refiners. That is who is the beneficiary if this amendment passes, not consumers. They will not benefit. In fact, they will be hurt. Not farmers, not beet processors, not cane mills, but refiners, they will be the beneficiaries.
